SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE most important intelligence received by the Bombay Mail of the 12th of December relates to a Bill introduced by Mr. Eden into the Legislative Council of Bengal, with a view to regulate the transport of native labourers to Assam, Cachar, and Sylhet. A general outline of this very necessary measure will be found elsewhere.

If the Delhi Gazette be not the victim of a stupid and vulgar hoax—which, in this case, is hardly possible—the Romish Archbishop of Agra has been indulging in the somewhat profane occupation of offering up public thanksgivings for an event that has not yet occurred, and which is not very likely to occur. The subject of that prelate's effusive gratitude is the reported conversion of her gracious Majesty to Romanism, and consequent early abdication. The French paper La Patrie was apparently the originator of this silly and impertinent rumour.

Sir William Mansfield returned from Aden on the 28th November, and was preparing to set out on a tour of inspection through the northern districts of the Bombay Presidency. The Commander-in-Chief of the Madras Army was at Hyderabad, in the Deccan, and about to be feted by Salar Jung, the enlightened Minister of the Nizam.

The appointment of Sir Charles Trevelyan as successor to Mr. Laing appears to have given universal satisfaction, his former opposition to the Income-tax having inspired the natives with a sanguine expectation of its early abolition.

There is nothing new from Central Asia beyond an apocryphal statement that the Ameer had declared his intention of passing the winter before Herat. The reported arrival in his camp of Mr. Eastwick, from Teheran, will, in all likelihood, lead to a reconciliation of the belligerent kinsmen.

A very shocking disaster has occurred to a boat's crew of H.M.'s gunboat Penguin, about fifteen miles to the westward of Cape Guardafui. On the 1st Sept. a cutter and a whaler were detached, under the command of Sub-Lieut. Fountaine, to search for slave vessels between the Juba river and Port Durnford. While the sailors were engaged in obtaining a supply of water at Ras Mauber they appear to have been suddenly attacked by a party of Somalies, and, being taken by surprise, were forced to take refuge on board the cutter, leaving the whaler high and dry on the beach. On the 26th they touched at a place called Baraida, where a second collision with the natives took place, and with worse results than the former one.

On this occasion the commanding officer and thirteen British seamen were either killed by the Somalies, or drowned in the attempt to escape. One of the party did contrive to make his way to Cape Guardafui, where he was kindly treated by a Somalie, and sent on to Allooda with a guard of four armed men. On the way, however, he unfortunately fell in with some of the same tribe that had massacred his shipmates, who overpowered his guard and put him to death. A vague rumour of this barbarous tragedy having reached Aden, H.M.'s ship Semiramis, I.N., was despatched to inquire into the affair. The Sultan proved amenable to reason, or to force, and made no effort to mitigate the guilt of his people. Eight of the murderers, including one of the head men of the tribe, were taken down to the shore and beheaded, in presence of the crews of the Semiramis and Penguin.

The "Indian Army and Civil Service List," for the first half of the year 1863, is now ready, and may be had at any respectable booksellers.

THE LAST KING OF DELHI.

The last vestige of the Mogul sovereignty in India has just passed away. The last King of Delhi has just expired in miserable exile, far away from the land where his ancestors ruled as Emperors; and yet few, we believe, will give a tear of pity to the end of that dynasty which could boast of the great names of Aurungzebe and Akbar, and fewer still will waste their regrets upon the wretched imbecile who proved a traitor to his benefactors, and met with the just reward of his follies and his crimes.

The history of the Mogul power in India has yet to be written. Hitherto we have been only favoured with translations or abstracts from Mussulman writers, enlivened with a few seraglio stories of blood and sensuality, but exhibiting little if any knowledge of the hidden springs of Islam; of that vitality which still animates opposing sects; and of that marvellous reformation which Mohammed and his Koran effected in the manners, the morals, and the religious creeds of many millions. For more than three centuries the faith and doctrines of the Prophet had invaded India and been established at Delhi, before a dynasty of the family of Timour had commenced the formation of an empire in this country; and within a similar period the Mogul empire, having spread over the whole Indian continent like an overwhelming flood, rapidly wasted away and dried up, until nothing remained but the little court at Delhi, as insignificant, as lifeless, and as putrid as a stagnant pool. Men, however, rather than empires are our immediate subjects; and perhaps we may utilise the recent death of the last of the Moguls by placing before our readers a few remarks respecting his predecessors, so as to convey in a gossiping form the more salient points in Mogul history; perchance as clearly as if we sought to mouth it out in the traidesty of Gibbon's style, which is occasionally affected by certain journalists, but which always proves so painfully heavy and dull. Three centuries ago, when bluff King Hal and Cardinal Wolsey were quarrelling about a divorce case; a young Mogul, named Baber, an offshoot of the great families of Ghengiz Khan and Timour, was leading the life of a knight-errant, and at the head of a band of nondescript warriors was winning and losing kingdoms with bewildering celerity. Sometimes he commanded a mighty army, and was sovereign of Bokhara or Afghanistan, and anon he was a homeless wanderer, with perchance only a hundred personal adherents. Ultimately he established his rule somewhere between the Indus and Oxus, and from thence invaded India, where he overthrew the Mussulman power at Delhi and set up the throne of the Moguls. Baber was a hero of the old stamp—brave and dashing in the field, and generous and convivial in his hours of repose. Wine was his besetting sin, but even his drinking parties were free from coarseness. He loved to carouse in some pleasant spot with a few boon companions, near a wood or a river, or on a hill with a fine prospect, and where songs and stories, repartees and recitations gave a zest to the wine and wings to the fleeting hours. The reigns of Baber, of his son Humayoon, and of his grandson Akbar, extend over the whole of the sixteenth century, and thus correspond to the reigns of the Tudors and the period of the Reformation. They professed Islamism, but were bad Mussulmans and very tolerant of other religions. Baber, as we have seen, indulged in forbidden drinks. Humayoon studied astrology, and on one occasion, during an interval of exile in Persia, turned from Sonneh to Sheeah with very little hesitation, in order to secure the support of the Persian King. Akbar had still looser notions about religion, but he was the wisest ruler of the three, and perhaps the wisest of all the Mogul Emperors. He established an admirable system of revenue, by increasing the revenue from the land, and abolishing all other modes of direct taxation. He also compiled a complete survey of the empire, infinitely more comprehensive than the Doomsday Book of William the Conqueror; for the work of Akbar comprised not only a survey of lands, but a full account of his administration and occupations, from the highest affairs of State down to partridge catching and the training of hawks. As regards religion, Akbar professed a desire to learn every different form of belief and worship. He even sent for more Roman Catholic missionaries from Goa, and amused himself by setting them to argue with some Mussulman doctors, when, of course, both parties claimed the victory. At last he proposed to settle the rival pretensions by a very serious ordeal. He undertook that a moolha should leap into a furnace with the Koran in his hand, provided that a friar would follow him with a Bible, when of course the man who escaped would be regarded as the exponent of the only true faith. The friars gave much deliberation to the matter, but being doubtful whether Providence would interfere, they very wisely declined the trial. Akbar died within a year or two of the death of Queen Elizabeth, and was followed in succession by Jehangier, Shah Jehan, and Aurungzebe, whose reigns covered the seventeenth century, and correspond to the reigns of the Stuarts, and to Oliver Cromwell and the "glorious revolution" of Dutch William. Jehangier and Shah Jehan were easy-going sensualists, fond of wine, and always under the rule of women. Under them the empire never extended to the south of the Nerbudda river, and the Mussulman kings of the Deccan were still, more or less, independent of the Mogul sovereigns of Delhi. Jehangier is known to the English readers as the passionate lover of the beautiful Nourmahal, the "Light of the harem," celebrated in "Lalla Rookh" by that love-making, story-telling bard, Tom Moore. The poet has alluded to the estrangement between Jehangier and Nourmahal, but he has not told the story correctly. He alludes to it as

"A something light as air—a look,
A word unkind or wrongly taken."

But, in truth, Jehangier had put the husband of Nourmahal to death, in order to marry the latter; and indeed the reigns both of Jehangier and Shah Jehan, though outwardly brilliant, and the golden period of Mussulman art, especially in the matter of architecture, were stained by intrigues, rebellions, and gross dissipation. Aurungzebe was a man of a different stamp. A Mussulman Puritan, he was strict and intolerant; pure in his private morals, persecuting in his administration, but prepared to commit any crime which would advance his own interest, he paved his way to the throne by the death of his three brothers; and he employed the seductions of wine and dancing girls to procure the imprisonment, if not the murder, of one of them. Aurungzebe effected the conquest of the Deccan, and might have established the throne of himself and his posterity over the whole of the great peninsula, but his intolerant and persecuting spirit aroused the terrible Mahrattas, who, from their fastnesses beyond the western ghauts, ultimately obtained the mastery in India, and ruled at Delhi through the medium of a puppet Mogul King.

The death of Aurungzebe was followed by a convulsion and civil war, which seems to have invariably followed the decease of every one of his successors. No sooner was the breath of a king out of his body, than his sons flew to arms, or the leading ministers and commanders turned their arms against them. Such were the events which preceded the accession of Shah Allum I., Jehandur Shah, Ferokseer, and Mohammed Shah. The history of these last reigns is one of decline and fall. The Mahrattas were advancing in all directions. The Peishwa, Scindia, and Holkar were all rapidly rising into power, and the Nizam of the Deccan was rendering himself independent, while the princes at Delhi were amusing themselves with buffoons and dancing girls, and frequently were compelled to submit to the assassin, or to the bowstring or blinding iron. In 1739 Nadir Shah, the usurper of the throne of Persia, advanced upon Delhi, and committed one of the most frightful massacres known to history. This was the great event in the reign of the last sovereign indicated—namely, Mohammed Shah.

The last line of the Mogul Kings, extending from the death of Mohammed Shah, in the middle of the last century, to the decease of the miserable exile at Rangoon a few days ago, scarcely deserves mention. The names of the so-called Kings were Ahmed Shah, Allumgeer, Shah Allum II., Akbar Shah, and Bahadur Shah. The first was deposed and blinded. The second was assassinated. The third lived to extreme old age, and died in 1806 after experiencing vicissitudes which are almost without a parallel in history. He had, at the age of twenty-six, assumed the empty title of Great Mogul, on hearing of the death of his father; but at that time the Afghans and the Mahrattas were struggling for the real mastery of Hindostan. At first Shah Allum II. was assisted by the Nabob of Oude, and laid claim to Bengal, but Clive soon settled his pretensions in that direction, and subsequently profited by them. The puppet Mogul was of course easily induced to give away territory over which he had no control whatever, or even the shadow of authority, in return for an annual income. Accordingly, he gave the jagheer of Calcutta to Clive, and the dewannee of Bengal, Behar, and Orissa, and subsequently the Northern Circars, to the East India Company. Subsequently Shah Allum II. fell into the hands of Scindia, who used him as a means for lording it over the Peishwa and Holkar; but Delhi was subsequently invaded by the Rajpoots, who had risen against the exactions of Scindia, and treated the Mogul and his family with the greatest possible indignity. Princes and Princesses were starved, tortured, plundered, and insulted in the most cruel fashion, and some even expired from want of food; and a savage ruffian, named Gholam Kadir, not only originated all these atrocities, but put out the eyes of Shah Allum with his own hand and with the point of his own dagger. Subsequently Scindia recovered possession of Delhi, but the condition of the Great Mogul was not much improved. Finally, in the midst of the Mahratta war—namely in 1803, Delhi was captured by Lord Lake, and henceforth the Great Mogul was in the hands of the English, and in receipt of a magnificent pension. At that time Shah Allum was found by Lake "seated under a small tattered canopy, the remnant of his former state, his person emaciated by indigence and infirmities, and his countenance disfigured with the loss of his eyes, and marked with extreme old age and a settled melancholy." This poor old man died in 1806, aged eighty-six, was succeeded by his son Akbar Shah, who died in 1837, at the age of eighty, and who was succeeded in his turn by his eldest son Bahadur Shah, who has just sunk into his grave at Rangoon at about the same extreme old age. Such has been the progress of the fleeting dynasty of the Moguls. The most remarkable quality of the later members of the family appears to be their longevity, which seems to bear out the theory of Lewes, that longevity is a talent, generally hereditary, and not dependent upon that virtue of temperance which is popularly supposed to be specially rewarded by length of years. No doubt a large number of moral reflections will suggest themselves to all on glancing over the history of the race which has passed away, but the subject is worse than threadbare, and we gladly leave the moralizing to those who are fond of indulging in those truisms and platitudes with which the world has been bored to such an extent, that it is one of the greatest marvels of the nineteenth century that the world, at least the world of readers, still survives.—Englishman.

RAJAH DINKUR RAO'S ADVICE TO THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

The "Observations on the Administration of India," submitted to Lord Canning on the eve of his departure, by the late prime minister of Gwalior, are worthy of a detailed notice. Intended only for private circulation, they are too valuable, and reflect too much credit on their writer, not to be carefully studied by every Englishman who is interested in the prosperity of India. The Rajah is entitled to speak with authority. Not only have we summoned him to our Council, thus inviting his opinions, but for many years he was the real ruler of the State of Gwalior, and to him is due that code of laws which has secured such contentment to the people since 1851, that they were actively loyal to our cause in 1857. He thus speaks with the experience of a practical Asiatic statesman, and it will be well for us to weigh his counsels. His object is avowedly to induce Lord Canning's successor to carry out to its legitimate results that native policy with which his predecessor's name is so gratefully associated. The Rajah says he advocates the cause of the people only, and declares that "as the Almighty has given the Kingdom of Hindoostan to the English, so they ought to take into consideration the wishes of the Indian people." He is especially enthusiastic in his praise of Sir John Malcolm and Mr. Elphinstone, as men who made themselves beloved by the people. It is a new thing for any Asiatic in power to consult the interests of the people as such, but the writer is evidently sincere in his advice, with the express end of strengthening our power in the country.

The Rajah's views are briefly these. A century ago the native Governments were popular. Akbar was especially a good ruler, for, in common with some others, he made a just settlement of the land revenue, he reduced taxation, and allowed the mass of the people to govern themselves through punchayets. But as his successors overlooked these wise measures the people became discontented, and welcomed the English. Their administration of the country has been popular on account of "good revenue settlements, proper measures for punishing dacoities, robbers, and thieves, increase of colleges and schools, introduction of railways and canals, and adherence to promise." The reliance of the people on the good faith of our Government is proved by the millions invested by natives in its funds; while native States are so tyrannical that, in Rajpootana for instance, the bankers keep their treasure in Ajmere for the sake of English protection. Even now, so far as the princes are concerned, they have no grievances. They are convinced of the security of their own States, they have the right of adoption, and members of their class are invited to sit in the legislature. Our schools for boys are invaluable, if only caste distinctions were observed. As to girls' schools, the reasons for establishing them are "excellent," but the natives do not like their girls to be "tutored publicly." It is good to give honorary power to native gentlemen. "The order which is given to Europeans to buy lands in India is very good. By this the affection between them and the natives will be increased." This, it must be admitted, is a pleasing picture, and doubtless if all our subjects were as enlightened as the rajah (which we may make them in time) it might be taken as expressing native opinion.

But the question arises, "why, then, should there have been any mutiny?" It is curious that nowhere does this Mahratta statesman, who would prevent the killing of cows and maintain caste distinctions in schools and at wells, hint that the mutiny is to be ascribed to either the annexation policy, or the spread of education and Christianity. The very fidelity of nearly all the native princes is an argument against the former, while Oudh with its evil revenue policy and denuded of troops, was a special case. The cause of the mutiny, according to the Rajah, was that the sepoys "being inhabitants of India, were dissatisfied with the severity of some of the regulations which were against their custom and with the doubtful conditions of their rights, and committed the bloody deed foolishly and dishonestly, vainly confiding in their power as soldiers, and in the possession of the treasure and ammunition which they had seized. This bloody act of dishonesty and faithlessness was not liked by all classes of the natives, for all were not accessory to it, except those few only who were in the army and some others. It is also well known that there were, even during the height of the mutiny, many loyal subjects."

But the mass of the people, too, had been discontented "from a few years back, being pressed by several kinds of regulations, contrary to their custom." After this the Rajah is by no means clear in his statement of what the causes of discontent were previous to 1857. But we gather what they were in one sentence, our inquiry into and resumption of rent-free lands; our abolition of such trifling hereditary offices as village astrologers, priests, headmen, watchmen, barbers, and those Mirdha robbers who were bribed not to steal in their own village; and the sale of ancestral land under a decree of the court for personal debt. We must remember that the writer is a Mahratta, and that nearly the half of Southern Bombay and a large part of Central India were thus alienated by its temporary conquerors, so that inquiries on our part became necessary if impolitic. The last grievance has been recognised by the highest English authorities as the cause of the discontent in the North-Western Provinces, and the Rajah would meet it by putting the encumbered estate under Government management till it was cleared. This is now practically done in the North-West, and no such land can be sold without the sanction of the Judicial Commissioner in the Punjab. Here there is a conflict between the true policy of making land as saleable as corn, and that of securing the loyalty of the old families—a conflict which at present can be settled only by such compromises as these, and which will be extinguished in time by a permanent settlement.

So much for the invasion of rights which caused the mutiny, apart from the special sepoj grievances. But "after the mutiny tranquillity was restored, and the Government was compelled to add to the former causes of discontent by imposing the Income-tax. It is well known how much all the classes of people complained against this impost. How much more will they have been harassed and alienated by the imposition of the Stamp duties, Licence-tax, and many others? In such a state of things, arms were taken from the loyal and disloyal indiscriminately. It is unnecessary to say how much men must have felt being deprived of that which is considered the distinctive ornament of a soldier. It happened in some instances that loyal persons were imprisoned also, and fined too. The authorities should have pardoned one offence against such an act; but, on account of the law, they were often unable to do so. Institution of a new inquiry into grants, selling of the rights (Hucks), which the subjects value dearer than their lives, and many other things which will be described hereafter, are contributing to the dissatisfaction of the subjects."

It is to the credit of Mr. Laing and Lord Canning that they recognised these causes of discontent. Half the Income-tax is extinguished and the other half is doomed. The Licence-tax has been abolished. The complaint of a new inquiry into grants is hardly correct, for the Inam Commissions of Madras and Bombay are merely giving certainty of title at a cheap price. Under a vile police the enforcing of the Disarming Act was certainly attended with gross oppression; but that Act, too, has been deprived of its sting, in the eyes of the natives, by a recent amendment. As to the Stamp tax the Rajah is hardly consistent, for that alone gives us hope that the impost on incomes will not be renewed, and it is almost an indirect tax. We cannot understand why the natives should feel it, while we can understand how oppressive to the native would be the substitutes recommended by the Rajah—a tobacco and betel-nut tax, and increased customs, transit, and land duties. There may be wisdom in his other recommendation of a capitation tax which is so successful in British Burmah; but the native would, we humbly think, grumble at having to pay one-half more for all those English goods which he buys now in such enormous quantities, while any increase of the land revenue would be contrary to those "good revenue settlements" which the Rajah elsewhere says the people admire. The truth is that, in common with all wealthy Asiatics, the writer would tax the rich only as little as he can. But he differs from the rest of his wealthy countrymen in recommending a reduction of the Salt-tax.

Mr. Harington should take to heart his native colleague's warning against "heedlessly altering the laws." He quaintly says, "it should be always borne in mind that the people of this country do not like a multiplicity of laws." He would have a report made on every law in one year after it comes into operation, and would make the law member of Council, like the legislators of old, travel about "to ascertain from the ryots how the laws have operated." He would increase the number of native members in Council to four or five, and extend their term of service to four years. He would give, not the executive alone, as at present, but the imperial legislature, a veto on the Acts of all the local councils. He would re-establish the village punchayets, which, we observe, the Punjab authorities mean to do under the name of "family councils" for cases of caste and religion. He would extend the term of limitation to thirty years for immoveable property and twelve for debts. He would have no legalised pleaders in the courts, because they make the people suffer "inconvenience;" would make the Small Cause Courts subject to appeal; would have no compulsory registration of deeds; would have no judicial oaths; and would make the penalties of the Penal Code milder. Because of the bewildering laws and harassing taxes "contrary to their customs," the Rajah tells us, "the people have forgotten the goodness of the British Government, the love which they once entertained for it, and have begun to prefer the tyranny of the Native Princes."

It will be seen that this is a most valuable document. We confess our agreeable surprise at the revelations which it makes in all evident sincerity and truthfulness. If it is to be accepted, as we think it may safely be, as a picture of what the natives consider to be the evil and good of our administration, then we have cause for thankfulness, both that we have spread enlightenment so far, and that our power is so stable. Whatever be the result, we cannot go back; but it is gratifying to be assured that our truthfulness, our justice, our schools, our railways and public works, are so felt by the people of India, while the taxes which have made us disliked of late are almost entirely removed from the mass of our subjects. We have never read anything so full of hope for the regeneration of India by England as Rajah Dinkur Rao's "observations." We are evidently not governing in vain.—Friend of India.

COOLIE EMIGRATION.

At the meeting of the Legislative Council of Bengal, on Saturday, 22nd November, Mr. Eden moved that the Bill to regulate the transport of native labourers to the districts of Assam, Cachar, and Sylhet be read in Council. In doing so, the hon. member addressed the Council at some length in explaining the provisions of the Bill. The class of persons now employed to secure labourers would have to take out a licence, for each of which a fee not exceeding Rs. 16 would be charged. The licences to be granted by officers of Government attached to each district. It was also proposed to appoint emigration superintendents, who would have control over the parties engaged in employing labourers, and these people would be obliged to provide such people as they sent out to the villages in search of labourers with badges, upon which should be inscribed the name of the place where the labourers are to be sent. He then gave a detailed account of the precautionary measures provided by the Bill for the employment of labourers, care being taken in all cases that the labourer fully understood the conditions under which he contracted to serve—the period of service not to exceed five years. Government did not intend to interfere with the rate of wages. It was thought safe to leave that matter to be settled by the employer and the labourer. In case it was found that a labourer had been brought away without the conditions being sufficiently explained to him, he was to be sent back to his village, and the travelling expenses thereby incurred to be paid by the person employing him. Sufficient provision was also made for medical attendance, and in cases of any violent disease breaking out among the coolies, prompt measures were to be taken to remove from the vessel. Commanders of steamers and flats conveying emigrants were to be responsible for the desertion of the men.

Mr. Maitland said that though it was the opinion of some gentlemen that legislation in such a matter was not necessary, he, however, thought the Bill brought in by Mr. Eden was a wise and proper measure, and on general principles he considered it would be productive of beneficial results. With regard to the published statement attached to the Bill referring to the state of mortality among the emigrants, he believed the number of deaths was rather exaggerated. The mortality, however, at the present time he believed was a great deal less than it had before been. After referring to several passages in the published report of the committee, Mr. Maitland observed that if the committee had been empowered to take evidence in the same way as the Municipal Committee, a great deal more might have been elicited. He did not know who the Mr. Bennertz mentioned in the report was. There were several gentlemen in Calcutta interested in coolie emigration who would have been most anxious to have assisted the Committee with their experience and knowledge of the subject. Among the gentlemen he might mention the name of Mr. C. B. Stewart, who had taken a very active part in the matter. He fully agreed with what fell from Moonshree Abdool Luteef as to the necessity of a similar provision being passed with reference to sea emigration. He did not see any reason why the same precautionary measures should not be taken with regard to emigration by sea. There was one very good provision in the Bill which met with his entire concurrence. It was that which provided for the wearing of a badge, with an inscription upon it of the name of the place the labourers were asked to go to. It very often happened that the men were taken to Demerara instead of Bourbon or the Mauritius. He would conclude with one more remark. He believed, since the publication of the report, but was not certain as to the date, the report bearing no date, that there was a good deal of further evidence on the subject forthcoming, which he would suggest the committee should avail itself of.

The President said the Bill was one which he need not say met with his cordial support. It was a subject which was brought to his attention in a very forcible manner when he was at Cachar a short time ago, and the opinions expressed by planters and others of the absolute necessity for such a measure were unanimous. He confessed that from the accounts he received from Assam, and from what he could gather from gentlemen interested in the subject, some such provision was very desirable, though opinions differed as to the mode in which it should be carried out. He quite agreed with the Advocate General that the Bill should not interfere with the free action of the labourer, unless it was absolutely necessary to do so. With regard to the question of applying the Bill to labourers sent beyond sea, it must be known to the Council that the subject had been taken up by the Government of India, though at present it had been relinquished. There were several reasons why such a Bill should be taken up by the Imperial Council, and he would point out what would be a defect in the present Bill. Recruiting for labourers would not only take place in Bengal, but in the N.W. Provinces, Madras, and Bombay. It was very desirable that persons connected with emigration ought to be governed by one general law—at any rate, that part which related to the employment of labourers. Very great inconvenience would arise if one system was adopted in Bengal, another in Bombay, and so on in the other presidencies. The defect alluded to was this:—A Bill which would provide for the emigration of labourers in Bengal would be adopted for the N. W. Provinces, and the Council had no power to make a rule which would be binding on the magistrates of the N. W. Provinces. No doubt the Bill to be passed by the Governor General's Council would supply the omission.

But he had also no doubt that so far as the Government of the N. W. Provinces could co-operate with them, instruction would be given to the magistrates of the N. W. Provinces not to allow things to go on, unless with such checks as are provided in the present Bills.

The Bill was then read.

Mr. Eden moved that the Bill be referred to a Select Committee, consisting of the Advocate General, Mr. Maitland, Baboo Prosonocoomar Tagore, Moonshree Abdool Luteef, and the mover. —Englishman.

PUBLIC WORKS AND PRIVATE CAPITAL.

The various Governments in India began the month of October with above seventeen-and-a-quarter millions sterling of cash balance at their credit. Conceding, for once, to the home authorities that this balance has been unusually swelled by extraordinary receipts during the past twelve months, we shall still be within the mark if we fix the normal and bond fide balance at fifteen millions sterling. At the gloomiest period of the rebellion we found nine millions sufficient for the extraordinary as well as usual demands of the empire. But since in three years the trunk railway system with a network of light branches will be complete, and since branches of the three Presidency banks will be established in every large town, our financial facilities will be such that the balances may with perfect safety be reduced almost as low as those of England, or from four to five millions. For, it must be remembered, that all above four millions sterling of paper currency is represented by cash, so that from that source we shall never suffer panic. We doubt not that, by the time the five years' engagement with the Bank of Bengal ceases, we shall be enabled to utilise for the profit of the State and the good of the public at least twelve of these seventeen millions now hoarded in vaults or only partially employed by the Bank. This, however, is a matter for future consideration, but even the most timid financier will allow, with Mr. Laing, that at present ten millions of cash balances is a safe working maximum. Assuming fifteen to be the average amount, the serious question arises—Are the public, are the Government of India, justified in burying this talent of five millions in the earth, when every pound spent on public works now will be as valuable as a hundred hereafter? Allowing that the civil administration, and especially the Courts of Justice, must be improved at some cost, there will still be this enormous sum which we are bound to employ remuneratively. We are glad to learn that the Council of India are seriously considering how best to utilise some of these wasted millions.

The more immediately the money is spent the better. The modes in which it may be applied, as well as the annual "vote" of four millions from the Budget, are twofold—public works directly managed by the existing department, and grants-in-aid of private capitalists and companies. As to the former there is this advantage, that the present expensive establishment of engineer officers and subordinates declare they could double the work they now have. If the expenditure is to be raised from four to eight millions next year, the percentage of cost for establishment will be reduced from its minimum of twenty to at least twelve, which latter is very low indeed. We would recommend that all of the five millions which is not devoted to grants in aid of non-official companies should be used first in the completion of great unfinished works, and then be confined to roads and railway feeders. Of the former, in spite of Sir Bartle Frere's admirable minute of 1860, there is still a large number. As to the latter, they are carried out so slowly that, though it is deservedly Sir J. Grant's boast that he was the first to plan them in Bengal in 1859, some of the very shortest are not yet completed, four years after. The Darjeeling road is one and by no means the most notorious instance. In the present state of India, railway feeders, whether roads or light railways, are far more important than schemes of irrigation. All public works which refer to water should be stopped at a time when a permanent settlement is about to be thrown over the country. Nor is there any fear of a famine recurring till such a time as the fixing of the land-tax has developed private capital and energy in such a way as to make that catastrophe not less impossible elsewhere than it is in Bengal. The completion of all great works other than irrigational, and the rapid construction of roads on which private companies may afterwards lay down light railways, are the objects to which alone Government should at once devote every rupee of the five crores which is not required in aiding private effort.

There can be no doubt that the maxim is as true in India as in England, that the State should never attempt what the subject can do as well or better. And the Government of India, both as being despotic in constitution and a landlord in relation to its subjects, has been hitherto so much forced to act the part of a "terrestrial providence" that we rejoice to find it making boldly such a declaration as this:—"The question of an extension of the guarantee of railway companies may be disposed of at once by saying that his Excellency the Governor-general in Council considers that aid in this form cannot, under any circumstances that can now be foreseen, be again properly given to any Indian railway project." And again, Government rejects the proposal that it should make the roadway of a projected branch line from the Mutlah Railway to Diamond Harbour. The guarantee system has done its duty in giving India trunk railways, and costly as it has been at a time when rebellion dried up our resources we do not grumble; but to continue it would be to go back to the terrestrial providence stage. Government is now prepared in a spirit of wise liberality, which does it infinite credit, to encourage all good private projects by assisting them either with land, or a roadway for light rails, or a bonus of so much per mile opened, or a subvention of so much per mile towards working expenses till the profits reach five per cent.

The credit of raising this question and leading to so wise an arrangement is certainly due to Mr. Wilson, C.E. His "Indian Branch Railway Company," the "Indian Tramway Company," of which Mr. Forde, C.E., is the engineer, and the Diamond Harbour Extension of the Mutlah Railway Company, projected by the energetic Mr. Schiller, are the three plans now before the public, sanctioned by Government and likely at once to be carried out. The merits of the two first we have sketched before, and we are glad to find that our suggestion as to the necessity of fences in the case of the former will be enforced, while the latter see the hopelessness of working with cattle only, and intend to use also light locomotives. The contract binds down Mr. Wilson to have his first light railway along the road from Jeeagunge opposite Berhampore, twenty-seven miles to Nulhattee, a station of the East Indian Railway, open by the end of 1863. The directors of this company are further anxious to continue the line on the other side to Bogwangola, a great mart on the Ganges, and thence through Rungpore to Dinagepore and the Burham-pooter river for Assam. They offer also to cover with a light railway one-half of the main road in Rohilcund, and from Agra to Bhurtpore, from Agra to Mynpoorie, from Cawnpore to Lucknow, and from Mirzapore or Buxar to Goruckpore. The minimum speed will be twelve miles an hour. But for the present Sir C. Wood has directed that the experiment shall be confined to the Nulhattee line. Keeping to the north of the Hooghly, on the other hand, the Tramway Company have inspected lines for fifty miles, from Chogdah to Jessore; for eleven, from Bugoola to Kishnaghur; for twenty, from Chandpore to Kissen-gunge; for thirty, from Caragola Ghant to Purneah; and for thirty-four, from Hadjepore, opposite Patna, to Mozufferpore; thus opening up Jessore, Kishnaghur, Purneah, and Tirhoot, to the foot of the Hills. The two, to Mozufferpore and from Caragola to Kissen-gunge, are to be immediately laid down. In Bombay the same company are about to construct three lines of fifty-four miles in all, as feeders to the Bombay and Baroda line, and the Guicowar has promised his aid. The lines are from Palej to Tumbooseer, Neriad to Dakore, and Annund to Pitland. The important line connecting the new port of Sedasheghur with Dharwar, the centre of the cotton districts above the Ghats, will be undertaken by another company. In Madras the Tramway Company will lay a line from the Arconum Railway junction, about twenty-two miles, to Conjeveeram. Mr. Schiller's project, as modified by Government, would, with a capital of nearly a million sterling, strike off from the Mutlah line at Sonapore south through the finest rice district of India, pass by Barripore, and end at Diamond Harbour, twenty-six miles in length. In this case, however, there is no road, and to raise the capital may be difficult till the main line proves more of a success. But the day must come when Diamond Harbour will be a greater rival of Calcutta than the "Port of Canning" on the Mutlah. The creek is about to be again surveyed, and if it is objectionable, Kulpee, eight miles nearer the sea, will be selected as the great Hooghly Railway terminus. It seems to us that the South-Eastern Railway Company are not likely to injure their present scheme by carrying out this, and that the absence of a road on which to lay the rails cheaply will postpone the time when the shipping of Bengal will discharge goods and passengers only thirty miles from the sea, and below the dreaded "James and Mary" shoal.

The liberal and enlightened policy of the Government of India, in thus aiding, without guaranteeing, private capital, added to the facilities which will be given by the Bill now before the Legislature, for encouraging public works undertaken by private persons, should attract to India in the next ten years at least as much capital as has been guaranteed during the last decade. Would it not be worth while for the existing guaranteed companies to give a new fertility to the capital already sunk by undertaking these feeders?—Friend of India.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE STAR OF INDIA.—The most exalted order of the Star of India seems to be an object of intense desire among the majority of native chiefs who can muster a rag of pretension to the reversion of the Star left at the disposal of the Government by the decease of the Maharajah of Puttiala. The Rajahs of Jheend and Nubha assert a sort of claim to it as members of the last incumbent's family, as well as for services rendered to the British Government; whilst numbers of others put forward their claims with no scruple about the vitiation of the honour supposed to attach to the insignia by descending to begging for it.

A LEPER VILLAGE.—Lieutenant Powlett has drawn up an interesting report on a leper village at Turn-tarn, in the district of Umritsur. Some fifty years ago Runjeet Singh built a temple there, and among the beggars who flocked to share in the offerings was a large body of lepers who were employed as menials. The reputation of the tank for mitigating leprosy attracted others, and gradually the whole establishment passed into their hands. There are now 138 under a leper Mahunt, who organises them into begging gangs perambulating the country for months. The Punjab Government has decided to send all the Lahore and Umritsur lepers there, and to contribute Rs. 80 a month with some land for their support. This arrangement will, of course, be so made as to prevent the contribution being accepted as if for the temple.

COTTON FROM RAJPOOTANA.—We learn from Rajpootana that the rainfall this year has been greater than for the past forty years. The crops are accordingly most promising, while fever and ague are prevalent. Immense quantities of cotton have been exported to Bombay from Marwar, Meywar, and other native States. Cotton was bought at 11 rupees a maund at one time, but has gone up to 25. Cotton has streamed this season from so many obscure sources that the export promises to be much larger than was at one time expected.

EPIDEMIC IN BENGAL.—For some time past the Calcutta papers have been mentioning a mysterious epidemic as having made its appearance in Bengal; and its ravages at last appear to have attracted the attention of Government, who have appointed a committee of inquiry to report on it. From the accounts in the papers which have reached us we are unable to learn the nature of this new disease, unless we may infer that it is some deadly form of fever, from a long dissertation on typhus and ague mixed up with a notice of the epidemic in the Indian Field. We are told, however, that the population of the twenty-four pergunnahs is being carried off en masse by it, and that the fire of the burning-ghats along the Hooghly is never quenched. In some places, indeed, the dead are so many that they cannot be burnt, and are thrown into the river. We wish, however, our contemporaries on the other side of India would be more explicit: for as yet, while overflowing with the most harrowing general descriptions of the visitation, they have not mentioned one of its characteristics. It is worthy of being remembered that, in Bengal, cholera first, as it is generally supposed, appeared in the fall of 1817, and now a new pestilence threatens to issue from the same rank lair, to devastate the earth. After depopulating the town of Jessore, it overspread Bengal. It next extended to Behar, and, visiting the cities east and west of the Ganges, reached the North-west Provinces. Then crossing the Bundelcund and the Rewa Hills it showed itself at Jubbulpore in April, 1818, at Nagpore in May, and at Aurungabad, Ahmednugger, Seroor, and Poonah in July. On the 6th of August it broke out at Panwell; in Bombay four days after; and in fifteen months from its first appearance it had over-run all India. From the sea-ports of this country it was carried in ships over the Indian Ocean and Eastern Archipelago; and by the great caravan routes into Central Asia, where it raged with extraordinary fury from Bagdad to Peking. The great movement of troops in 1829-30 between England and India, India and Persia, Persia and Russia, and Russia and Poland, carried the epidemic directly into Europe.—Times of India.

N. W. PROVINCES, Nov. 6.—Mr. Edmonstone and staff passed through Cawnpore yesterday to his seat of government. An engine-driver at Agra has been sentenced to twelve months' imprisonment, with hard labour, for being drunk when in charge of an engine. Lord Elgin will not be at the opening of the E. I. Railway to Benares on the 15th of next month. Large quantities of cotton are still lying at Agra, Cawnpore, and Allahabad. Nov. 18.—Cotton is still flowing, in daily increasing quantities, into the Agra railway station, and the officials appear to be very much at their wits' ends to provide wagons for its transport. The natives in these provinces have hitherto exhibited the greatest repugnance to having their cotton screwed into something like a decent-looking bale; the consequence is that the railway trucks, which should carry 100 maunds of cotton if properly compressed, can now only convey forty-five!—a loss to both shippers and carriers, such as people at home would scarcely credit. One of the most enterprising gentlemen connected with the trade of these parts, Mr. Palmer, has, I believe, succeeded in persuading a few of the Cawnpore dealers to allow their cotton to be submitted to a very fair average pressure, not enough to interfere with its market value, and the happiest results, both to the railway and the cotton merchants, may be anticipated by this innovation. I saw two of those ugly-looking bags of cotton, each weighing three maunds, compressed by an ordinary screw at Cawnpore into the shape and neatness of a bale of Manchester goods. The native merchants, on witnessing the result were clamorous for getting all their cotton pressed after the manner of the metamorphosed bags. Sheds are in course of construction for the picking and cleaning process, and, no doubt, when the screw gets into proper working order, more cotton will be brought to it than the machine can accommodate.—Englishman.

THE COSSYAH REBELLION.—Captain Morton's letter of the 15th of October last having swept away every hope on the part of the Government of bringing the rebel tribes to reason and submission by peaceful means, stern measures were at once resolved upon. Orders were sent to the authorities at Cheera Poonjee directing the immediate organisation of ample means of carriage for the force to be employed against the rebels; and the Lieutenant-governor of Bengal, immediately after his return to Calcutta from his last official tour, communicated with General Showers, commanding the Presidency Division, and the following plan of operations was resolved upon:—The 28th N.I., now at Gowhatty, will march into the hills from the northward; the detachments of the 44th N.I., in Cachar and Sylhet, will be called in; the Eurasian Artillery at Dacca will be sent up to Cheera Poonjee with mortars; Colonel Dunsford, who commands the 28th Native Infantry, will direct the operations of the entire force; and the 1st Battalion of Bengal Military Police has been ordered to Cherra Poonjee to serve under his orders. These arrangements will give a force in the hills of three strong regiments of Sikh Infantry and one of Goorkas, with mountain artillery; whilst the Sylhet and Cachar frontier will be guarded by the 33rd N.I. and the Kamroop regiment, and in the northern or Assam frontier the posts will be held by the 33rd N.I., with head-quarters at Gowhatty. It is intended to arm one company of each native infantry regiment with two-grooved rifles. On the other hand, Colonel Beadle has been ordered to place himself in communication with Major Dalton, the Commissioner of Chota Nagpore, with a view to the latter officer raising a body of 500 danghur coolies to proceed to the scene of hostilities, and to act either as a carriage corps, or for the purpose of opening the hills with roads; they receiving batta whilst employed in the former capacity. The Commissioner of Dacca has also been instructed to purchase ponies for carriage purposes; so that, in this respect, the troops operating in the hills will be well off. This is the proper spirit and manner in which to meet this long neglected rebellion, and as the Government is now at last in earnest, and has written to the Commissioner of Assam,—"You will remain in the Hills till the rebellion is put down, and the authority of the Government effectually restored," we make no doubt of soon seeing an end of the troubles on our south-eastern frontier. The Commissioner of Assam is ordered to temper severity with mercy as much as possible, but some of the leaders in the rebellion are put out of the pale of Government amnesty, Rs. 1,000 being offered for the apprehension of Oookiang, and Rs. 500 for that of other distinguished malcontents. The Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal has, in our opinion, wisely declined to accede to Capt. Morton's suggestion, that the friendly Cossyachs should be employed against those in rebellion; but his honour has counselled the employment of the former in police situations, where, as he justly remarks, their services will be better utilised.—Englishman.

TEA-GROWING IN BENGAL.—Looking at the papers before us (says the Hurkaru), we see that, whereas in 1861 there were 12,045 acres of land in Assam under tea cultivation, the number has since risen to 16,000 in all. Now, only eight short years have elapsed since English enterprise determined to travel in the direction of this rich province, and it has now made impenetrable forests and jungles richly remunerative. But the following table, compiled from the papers before us, will show at a glance the state of affairs in the tea-growing districts of Bengal:—

No. of Names.	Plantations.	Area.	Increase.	Estimated crops. lbs.	No. of labourers.
Assam	160	16,000	3,065	17,88,757	16,611
Darjeeling	—	13,929	1,904	78,344	4,819
Cachar	—	No statistics furnished, but out-turn estimated by the Commissioner to be about ten lacs of rupees' worth of tea.
Sylhet	—	3,914	plants too young to be picked.

THE EAST INDIA RAILWAY has been opened to Patna and Dinapore, 411 miles from Calcutta. The line will be opened to Mirzapore in the beginning of 1863.

SANITARY REGULATIONS.—The Commander-in-Chief has issued some valuable sanitary regulations for the army, and has at the same time paid a high compliment to Dr. Hathaway, which, we trust, may be taken as an assurance that all practical Hygienists in India will no longer be discouraged as hitherto. To remove the chief sources of malaria when a European regiment is on the march, large trenches are to be dug at a distance of at least 120 yards from the flanks of each encamping ground, and are to be carefully filled in with earth before the rear guard leaves the spot. In the case of native troops, which have not the same establishment of sweepers, the same principle is to be observed, and the native local authorities will see that the area of each encamping ground is effectually cleared the moment it is left by the troops. In all cases the local authorities are to be consulted on the subject of wells, and effectual means must be taken to provide good drinking-water before the arrival of the troops on the ground. The arrangements are so simple that it amazes us they never were ordered before. Every one who has lived in a large camp for a few days knows how pestilential the ground becomes. The order seems to be lacking only in one point—no provision is made for securing the obedience of the Tehsildars and other civil authorities. In another General Order Sir Hugh Rose offers prizes varying from 25 to 5 rupees for the best plots in the gardens cultivated by each European regiment, wing and company. The gardens are to be inspected once a year, and the day on which the prizes are given is to be a holiday for the regiment, "the band playing, and the regimental school children attending, while the distribution takes place." Officers are instructed to see that the soldiers are encouraged to cultivate gardens close to their barracks, so that they may reach them easily and work in undress.

JUSTICE IN THE NON-REGULATION PROVINCES.—A peculiar case of hardship arising from the manner in which justice is occasionally dispensed in the non regulation provinces has just been brought to our notice. A serishtadar in the Revenue Department of the Punjab having been accused of bribery and corruption by one of the tehsildars, was, by order of the Commissioner, suspended on the 24th October, 1860, and directed to answer the charges made before the Personal Assistant to the Commissioner aforesaid. It appears that this officer did not conclude his investigation of the case, but left the matter to be settled by the Deputy Commissioner, in February, 1861. The unlucky serishtadar has since that time been under surveillance, and the government has attached his house and property. It would appear that the authorities in the Punjab have never arrived at any decision, and, consequently, the prisoner—for he is neither more nor less, being under restraint—is unable to obtain any livelihood; nor is it likely that Government, having suspended him from employment, has given him the wherewithal to obtain food for himself and family. Surely the law does not hold that a man accused of any crime not amounting to felony should be deprived of his means of obtaining his subsistence for such a lengthened period as two years; nor does the law warrant a suspension of judgment beyond a reasonable time. If the man be guilty, punish him; if innocent, let him go. But why keep him strung up between the two decisions? Were he guilty and imprisoned, Government is bound to feed him; were he innocent, he could obtain employment and feed himself. But he is in the worse position of the two. He is not guilty,—not innocent; so the Government will not feed him nor let him feed himself.—English man.

ASSISTANT ADJUTANT-GENERAL.—Henceforth, the Gazette notifies, officers of the rank of Captain will, equally with Field officers, be considered eligible for the appointment of Assistant Adjutant-general at Head-quarters. This order is applicable to the three Presidencies, but the Assistant Adjutant-general of Artillery with Head-quarters of the Madras and Bombay Presidencies, respectively, must still be of the rank of Field officer.

INAUGURATION OF HONORARY MAGISTRATES.—The Delhi Gazette states that the anticipated ceremony of inaugurating the newly-appointed native honorary magistrates came off at Urmitsur with considerable eclat on Friday morning, the 28th November. The site selected for the durbar was, it is to be hoped, not ominous of some fatal future day when English rule shall be swept away, and native domination shall resume its sway; but it was a coincidence that the shumeenas were pitched on the site where, only three short months ago, stood the Kotwallee built by Mr. Charles Saunders. The meeting was held at eight a.m.; the officiating commissioner, Mr. Edward A. Prinsep, presiding, supported on his right by the assistants in civil employ, and other European gentlemen, and on his left by the deputy-commissioner, Major Farrington, and the principal inhabitants not specially concerned, with Sirdar Shumsher Singh, Sindawalliea, at their head. A small contretemps as to the precedence claimed by a native gentleman having been disposed of to his satisfaction, Mr. Prinsep announced the object of the durbar, held in compliance with special instructions received from the Lieutenant-governor. The newly-appointed magistrates were severally introduced to the meeting by Major Farrington, in the order in which their names appeared in the Gazette, namely, Sirdar Mehtab Singh Ma-jeeetia, Sirdar Mungul Singh, Ramghureen, Rai Lall Chund, Gayan Chund, Mahomed Shah, and Baboo Mohun Lall. They had been placed in order on seats on the left front of the chair, while the members of the Town Council sat opposite, on the right front. The Deputy Commissioner then proceeded to read the rules passed for the guidance of honorary magistrates, translating them paragraph by paragraph into the vernacular, after which the Officiating Commissioner addressed the assembly (by that time considerably extended by many lookers on, not less than from twelve to fifteen hundred in number) in a speech of some duration, congratulating the newly appointed on the honour conferred upon them, in accordance with the desire of the British Government to avail themselves more and more of the experience of native gentlemen in administering justice not only in all large towns, but also in villages and townships where boards were to be appointed, to decide on the small cases that now occupied so much of the time of the English officers. Mr. Prinsep dwelt also on the progress of roads and canals, hoped water communication would soon be established between Urmitsur and the Ravee, and that the establishment of presses in the town would greatly facilitate the export of cotton, now such a material element in the growing prosperity of the country. The address was received with marked attention by the assembled multitude, and the meeting broke up with the announcement that the new court was open from that day, and that two of the members of the new magistracy would sit at once to investigate cases. On the dispersion of the assembly five cases were brought forward by the police, and at once disposed of by the two seniors.

NATIVE PREJUDICES.—The Indian Jurist reports a decision of Sir B. Peacock in which he has struck a blow at the prejudice which prevents wealthy natives from, in Court or even in their own houses, verifying their complaints, according to the Civil Procedure Code. Rajah Nursing Deb, in a suit not otherwise interesting, repudiated a deed which the defendants alleged he had signed, but would not, except through an agent, himself swear he did not sign the deed. On the other hand, the defendants verified their statements. In his decision, dismissing the Rajah's suit, the Chief Justice said, and the words should be weighed by every litigant in the country, "We are told that persons of the Rajah's station in life in this country have a prejudice against appearing and deposing in a court of justice. If this prejudice is the cause of the Rajah's non-attendance, the court can only regret it for his own sake, and for the cause of justice, if his case is a true one. But he must not expect the court to find that his charge against the defendants of forgery and conspiracy is a true one upon the evidence of me-nials, when he refuses to give his own evidence upon a matter within his own knowledge. It is not the wish of the court to disregard honest prejudices, however erroneous. But they cannot allow such prejudices to interfere with the due administration of justice. If parties will not come forward and give their own evidence in cases in which such evidence is most important, and the best that can be attained, they must not complain if their written statements, verified by their mook-tears and not by themselves and supported by the evidence of menials and a class of witnesses of whom any number can be obtained to prove any fact that is wanted, are not believed. The court will require the best evidence to be given, and will not be satisfied with the evidence of inferior witnesses, put forward by the parties themselves while they remain in the background, and plead their prejudice as an excuse for their absence. As this rule comes to be more generally acted upon, fewer false cases will be put forward, and the occupation of hired witnesses will be gone."

INDIAN CHAPLAINS.—The Christian Intelligencer publishes a list of chaplains, beginning with the first, the well-known David Brown of Aldean, below Serampore, who began service in June, 1786, and died in service in June, 1812. Paul Limerick was the second, and the good and learned Claudius Buchanan the third. Henry Martyn's name appears with the entry, "died at Tocat in Persia." There is the name, too, of Thomas Thomason, father of the late Lieut.-Governor of the N. W. Provinces. A large number seem to have died in service, and two were dismissed. Jennings' name appears as "murdered in Delhi," F. Fisher and C. T. R. Moncieff as "murdered at Cawnpore;" G. W. Cooplund as "murdered at Gwalior;" and H. S. Polehampton as "died in besieged garrison Lucknow." The whole number from June, 1786, to September, 1862, is about 230.

THE CAVALRY RELIEF.—The following changes in the cavalry portion of the "relief" have been sanctioned by the Governor-general in Council, and ordered by his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief:—The 9th Bengal Cavalry, now at Julpigoree, in Eastern Bengal, is to be relieved by the 5th Bengal Cavalry from Seetapore in Oude; the 8th Bengal Cavalry, now at Cawnpore, replaces the 5th at Seetapore, and the 9th goes to Cawnpore, in the room of the 8th. The Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal having expressed his opinion that cavalry is not required at the stations of Berhampore, Raneeungee, or Hazareebagh, which were formerly supplied with cavalry detachments from the regiment stationed at Julpigoree, and it being considered advisable to avoid scattering cavalry regiments into detachments, the Governor-general has ordered that the 5th Bengal Cavalry shall, in future, only detach from regimental head-quarters at Julpigoree, a party of twenty-five sowars, under a native officer, for service with the Lieutenant-governor of Bengal at Alipore, and a similar party to be under the orders of the general officer commanding the presidency division in Fort William, as used to be the case before the military police were formed. These arrangements are an improvement upon the state of things which has hitherto existed as regards the cavalry regiment stationed at Julpigoree, which, scattered and detached over half Bengal, could never be in a proper state of discipline and efficiency.

THE STAFF CORPS.—The Government of India has recently ruled that officers of the staff corps in civil employ are entitled to the full staff corps pay of their rank, although this should be in excess of their full or consolidated civil salaries.

OFFICIAL COSTUME.—Orders have been received from the Secretary of State for India that all Covenanted Civil officers are to wear the diplomatic uniform of their rank on dress occasions, and that all judicial officers are to wear robes in Court.

A NATIVE RIFLE ASSOCIATION.—Mr. Dunlop, of the Civil Service, well-known as a sportsman and for his services during the mutiny, has planned the establishment of a North Western Rifle Association for native gentlemen allowed to bear arms as well as for Europeans.

LIEUTENANT B. S. PARLEY.—His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief has been pleased to confirm Lieutenant B. S. Parley, of the late 6th European Regiment, as Fort Adjutant, Fort Williams, in succession to Captain Nightingale, whose tenure of the appointment has been forfeited by prolonged absence in Europe. Lieutenant Parley was appointed to officiate in the appointment last year, on the breaking up of the 6th Europeans, by his Excellency, as a mark of the Commander-in-Chief's satisfaction with the efficiency and zeal displayed in his discharge of the duties of adjutant of the regiment.

CHERRAPOONJEE.—The Dacca News reports a continuance of the panic at Cherrapoonjee. Major Haughton, the Commissioner, was there, and more troops had left Dacca for Sylhet. The incidents can muster fifty rifles, and the rebels are represented as not more than 200 or 300 in number, and broken up into small parties. Three Bengalis—two pedlars and one sepoy—were murdered by them in their descent on the Tharria Ghaut market. The rebels are said to have conspired the omens, which in their case consist in breaking eggs, and to have found them favourable for continuing the revolt. The whole matter is really so trifling that Government should crush it at once.

COAL IN REWAH.—Coal to a large extent has been lately found in Eastern Rewah, and the Government of the North-Western Provinces has forwarded to the supreme Government correspondence connected with it.

ABOLITION OF TRANSIT DUTY.—The Jagheerdars of Nyagaon and Nygaon, in Bundelcund, have abolished all transit duties within the limits of their respective estates; also Maha Rajah Holkar, and the Rajahs of Dhar and Dewasshvae, have abolished the transit duty on cotton within their respective territories.

THE MAHARAJAH OF ULWAR, in Rajpootana, has contributed fifteen thousand rupees towards the Lancashire Relief Fund.

ANOTHER OF OUR FEUDATORIES.

Such feudatory States as Kupporthulla, Puttiala, Bhopal, and even Rewah, illustrate the indirect influence of English Government on even the most Conservative of Asiatic principalities. Not confined to Upper or Central India, that influence has spread to the very extremity of the Peninsula. In the little palatinate of Travancore we have an example at once of the only pure Hindoo State in India which has not yielded to Mahomedan influences; yet of one which, in a most remarkable manner, has been affected by English institutions. Though priestcraft flourishes there with a luxuriance known only in Spain, yet liberty of conscience prevails to an extent of which enlightened Spain is still ignorant. Syrian, Romo-Syrian, and Romo-Catholic Christians have for centuries enjoyed the protection and even favour of the Travancore princes with a true toleration manifested by no Mussulman except Akbar, while in more recent times Protestant Missions have won their greatest triumphs among the slaves, the outcasts, and the indigenous tribes of the country. Steadily the revenue has risen to half-a million sterling annually; and if we estimate civilisation by such tests as the free circulation of a sound paper currency and the cultivation of astronomical and scientific lore, we must admit Travancore to be as civilised as British India. The very geographical position of this corner of India may well attract notice. Bounded by the Western Ghats and the Indian Ocean, the narrow strip of land reminds one of Chili. A series of lakes, navigable by small brigs and country craft, affords splendid water communication in the northern portion of Travancore—some of the armlets of these reaching almost to the foot of the Ghats. The forests abound with valuable trees, Travancore teak enjoying a just celebrity in shipbuilding. The rosewood is another high-priced timber. A coffee planter, who has recently settled in a hitherto little known part of the forest range, has discovered an abundance of sandal-wood. If this should turn out to be as good as that which is obtained from Mysore and Coorg, the trade in it will prove very attractive. The three important productions of the country are cocoanut, areca-nut, and pepper. The first is exported in oil, coir, and copra.

In the days of the late General Cullen the administration of Travancore elicited the scorn of all. But in a happy moment things took a better turn. A resident who minded mineralogy more than public works or law courts, a rajah who, though very amiable, stuck to antiquated ideas, a Dewan who was the repository of all Asiatic voices, have alike succumbed to time. The present rajah was installed by Mr. Maltby in the latter part of 1860. The last two years have been a period of creditable progress in Travancore. Mr. Maltby knew thoroughly how to make the British name respected by all classes. His moral influence was very great. He had the good fortune of having to deal with a dewan quite up to his time. Madhava Rao was the favourite pupil of the present director of public instruction in Madras. Though a Brahmin, and a Mahatta to boot, he heartily admires the English nation. He has not lived these thirteen years in a native court without learning how to guard himself and the public weal against the grovelling intrigues with which native Courts abound. The combined efforts of Messrs. Maltby and Madhava Rao have effected much. The pepper monopoly has been abolished. The tobacco monopoly, which the sircar still retains, has been divested of its evils, the selling price being brought down to the level of that of the smuggler. We hope Sir C. Wood may, in one of his freaks, give away to the Rajah the now worthless seacoast villages of Anjengs and Tangachery, which have been the hotbeds of smuggling, and get in return a more productive tract adjoining our own territories. But action is the last thing we expect of Sir W. Denison. Several minor trades, such as those in fins and shells, have been made free. A just but slight increase has been made in the commutation value of the tax on paddy lands. The temporary increase in export and import duties is somewhat complained against. But who did not complain against a similar act of our own Government? This increase, however, will be done away with in a couple of years. Public works have been advancing very creditably. There is a good road of between sixty and seventy miles to the south of Trevandrum. A canal in the same district is partly finished. A track opening a communication between Madura and Aleppy across the Ghats, via Cottayum, has been made. Aleppy, which is perhaps the best harbour in India, is supplied with a good light-house, fitted with splendid lights. Education has been extended. While village schools are being reconsidered by the Madras Government, Travancore has obtained some dozen district schools.

Mr. Maltby has given place to Mr. Fisher, who is said to be highly conscientious, though not trained to political duties. He has only to follow the footsteps of his predecessor, to keep himself clear of those intrigues which so often entangle unwary residents. While we can speak favourably of many things, it is nevertheless a fact that many more need reform. There are vast tracts of unreclaimed land fit for coffee plantations. An experimental garden is established at Cottayum. But the system of the sale and taxing of lands has to be greatly improved. A certain section of the people that owns lands for supplying the local Government with provisions to feed filthy vagrants, and to propitiate images of stone and brass, should be disburdened of these duties, and a definite tax fixed on their possessions. We know that the young Rajah is anxious to gain credit for enlightenment; and we are sure he will not rise in the opinion of the enlightened public by weighing himself with gold, or allowing himself to be half suffocated in a golden lotus. Mr. Maltby wanted to bring about a thorough reform in the judicial department. He did much by raising salaries and by introducing the recent civil and penal regulations enacted by our Legislature. But in India excellence of system is of less importance than individual ability. We fear the Judicial bench of Travancore still contains men who have no idea of equity in the abstract, and who do not scruple to brow-beat witnesses. Until the brush of reform removes these, and their places are filled by men of tried integrity, no good will result. We trust the Rajah is alive to the fact that it is his own interest to secure long the services of his present Minister, and that not only formal but moral support should be accorded to him. This, coupled with the guidance and steady co-operation of the Resident, will tend to make Travancore fit to rank among the best of our feudatories.—Friend of India.

MISCELLANEOUS.

MAULMAIN, Nov. 11.—Having been pressed for time I was not able to send you, by the last mail, the subjoined notification, lately issued by the magistrate, on the subject of waste lands in town:—"It is hereby notified, for general information, that the following instructions have been received from the Chief Commissioner of British Burmah, regarding the sale of land the property of Government, situated within the jurisdiction of the town magistrate, Maulmain. 2. The land will be sold by public auction at an upset price of two hundred rupees per acre, subject to an annual ground rent of five rupees an acre redeemable at twenty years' purchase. This is altogether irrespective of municipal tax, which will be imposed and will not be redeemable. 3. Persons wishing to purchase unoccupied land on the above terms should make their application to the town magistrate, when a survey of the land applied for will be made, at the expense of the applicant, to be submitted to the Commissioner, Tenasserim division, for his orders as to whether the land is to be sold. Should the Commissioner approve of the land being sold, it will be put up for sale by public auction on the terms above stated. 4. Grantees occupying land in excess of their grants are required to vacate the same, and it will be disposed of on the same terms as unoccupied land. 5. Persons occupying land, who have no grants, that is to say, who have merely a squatter's title to the land they occupy, will not at present be interfered with. The question as to how such land is to be disposed of is still pending before Government. 6. It is further notified, that officers have been specially appointed to conduct, under the orders of the town magistrate, an examination of the titles by which occupiers of land in the town hold the land they occupy, and to make a correct survey of the town, showing what land belongs to Government and what to private individuals. It is expected that these officers will shortly commence operations." Waste lands abound. Labour is excessively dear. You cannot get a common coolie under Rs. 10 a month, and the fellow will not work half his money's worth. Agricultural implements, except of the most rude and primitive kind, are not to be had in Maulmain. Works of irrigation have never been once thought of by the authorities. To water your plantation you must pray for rain, which you get in plenty for three months in the year. Accordingly, cultivation is found not to pay, and, if the present state of things continue, I apprehend it will never be found to pay. Colonel Phayre will have to wait long, very long, before he gets the people here to rightly appreciate his liberality, and to avail themselves of his waste-land favours. The settlement officers appointed, as stated in the notification, are Mr. T. J. Fallon, Assistant Commissioner of Menghee, and Mr. W. Montgomerie, the Surveyor attached to the office of the Commissioner of the Tenasserim division. Mr. Fallon is expected to arrive by the next mail.—Englishman.

COOLIE EMIGRATION, in Madras as in Bengal, would appear to be one of the most important questions of the day. While the Travancore Circar has declined officially to recognise, or afford, any aid to the scheme of emigration to the French colonies, a Bill is now before the Bengal Legislature to regulate inland coolie emigration. The "recruiter," it is stated, is compelled to take out a licence by the provisions of the Bill in question, before he is allowed to begin operations. The Madras Chamber of Commerce has been successful, thanks to the energy of the local press, as regards the quasi-slave-trade in vogue at Pondicherry. The Governor of Pondicherry had resolved, according to a Madras paper, that emigration from India to the French colonies should take place from Pondicherry only. French shipping, it was contended by the authorities of the Imperial dependency, would be benefited thereby, whereas the emigrés, if shipped from British ports, would only be a source of gain to perfidious bottoms. Free trade in shipping and a small compensation for the loss India sustains by the treaty of carrying some of our native fellow-subjects to French colonies, were at once ignored by the arbitrary legislation of the Pondicherry functionary, who, it is stated, had a keen look-out only for the money interests of a son-in-law devoted to the game of speculation in Asiatic flesh. And so the true story of the traffic was brought to the notice of the Emperor of the French, who, much to the disgust of his Pondicherry Excellency, coolly "annulled" the decree fulminated with regard to coolie emigration by his excellent representative in Southern India.

MISSIONARY OFFICIOUSNESS.—Colonel Fytche, the Commissioner of Maulmain, has brought a serious charge against the well-known American missionary, Dr. Mason. Some time ago the Messrs. Harper, timber merchants, were attacked and robbed by a party of dacoits in the Red Karen country. Captain Lloyd, Deputy Commissioner of Toungoo, sent an armed party of Christian Karens into the district, which fell upon the village of Woottee, where a chief named Pokhai resided, on the suspicion that the people had participated in the attack, burnt down the place, and having met with resistance, killed 15 men, women and children. Captain Burn, Assistant-commissioner of Martaban, who has since resigned the service, was near the spot on leave, and in the report on the subject he was called on to furnish, he says that Pokhai was innocent, and that the fixed impression of the pagan Karens is that the English would not be on friendly terms with them until they had all become Christians. "Keppoghyee himself, the oldest and most influential Chief in Western Karennee, told me that he had become a Christian because he knew that all Government appointments in the Toungoo district amongst the Karens were made by, or at the recommendation of, Dr. Mason, the head of the American Mission of Toungoo, who, he said, he had heard was also the most favoured servant of the Queen, and exercised a most decided influence on all matters connected with Karennee over the Chief Commissioner of British Burmah." Colonel Fytche endorses this opinion, and adds, "Dr. Mason has, it is said, with what truth I cannot state, formally applied for troops to be sent against Pokhai; for the peace of the frontier, the less that missionaries are allowed to interfere with the independent tribes beyond our borders the better."

UNHEALTHINESS OF MADRAS.—What is the present population of Madras? By some (as it appears from a report submitted to Government by the Principal Inspector-General Medical Department) it was supposed to be 700,000; but the Municipal Commissioners make it doubtful whether it exceeds 450,000. The mortality during 1860, we are told, was remarkable, the registered deaths amounting to 13,498. It is evident that the year 1860 was an unhealthy year. But we have reason to know from the mortuary register of the Municipal Commissioners for 1860, up to this month, that the deaths reported are above 1,200 per month; and these casualties are chiefly owing to cholera. The scourge is still raging in the densely-populated streets of the Black Town, notwithstanding the change in the weather. What is the cause of this alarming mortality? We are inclined to believe that it is from malaria engendered by the drains. It is impossible to take a walk or ride through the native streets without experiencing a nausea from the suffocating exhalations escaping from surcharged drains. When shall we be able to effect a plan by which the sewers shall be flushed, and the accumulating filth be rapidly washed into the sea?—Carnatic Telegraph.

THE POPE AND THE MADRASSEES.—The Roman Catholics of Madras lately petitioned the Pope on the subject of the Goa schism in India, and sent the document to Cardinal Wiseman for presentation, but only the following impractical answer has been returned:—"I was enabled to lay your address myself at the feet of the Holy Father; and it gives me much pleasure to add that his Holiness was pleased to accept it most graciously, and to charge me to transmit to you his apostolical benediction."

MADRAS BOATMEN.—We are glad to find that a crew of thirteen Madras boatmen have been punished for extortion. A lady passenger was landing from the Candia, assisted by a dubash. When half way to the shore the men asked for payment, and she gave the dubash half-a-sovereign, instructing him to pay the regular fare of three rupees. Seeing the gold the boatmen insisted there and then on having it, turned back to the steamer, and finally snatched the coin from the man. The fine of Rs. 3-8 each or fourteen days' imprisonment was too trifling. The offence is very frequently committed, but few will prosecute.

THE MISSION TO AVA.—The Rangoon Times relates the doings of our mission at Mandalay. Six days after Colonel Phayre's arrival at the capital he went by appointment to the palace, accompanied by Captains Newmarch, Shuttleworth, and Trent, and Messrs. Edwards, William Wallace, and Petter the photographer, to meet the King. Divested of shoes they squatted in the usual style and the King appeared. After the usual compliments he told Colonel Phayre that his boys, ten and eleven years old, could speak, one English and the other Hindustani, and asked him to test them. The King told him he should always stay in the capital, as he could govern Tenasserim, Toungoo and Arracan as well from Mandalay as from Rangoon, and when the King had any business they could meet at once without any delay. Comparing his friendship to the moon, which waxes larger and larger, he told Colonel Phayre to think of him wherever he saw the moon. The interview lasted an hour, and was one of ceremony. The natives think the King would make a Political as well as a Commercial treaty at once if we would surrender as much territory as would restore the boundary of the old Taline Kingdom. In his second audience of Colonel Phayre the King showed a disinclination to a treaty, as it will involve the loss of half his revenue, which is derived from the frontier custom-houses. A correspondent of the

Bombay.]

Englishman says that a private express boat from Mandalay reached Rangoon on 14th November with the news that a treaty had been signed; but the opposite is stated in the local journals. Colonel Phayre was to return on the 16th.

BOMBAY.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE MEKRAK COAST.—At the last meeting of the Bombay Geographical Society an interesting paper on the Mekrak coast, where the telegraph is now being laid, was read by Dr. Lalor, of the 2nd Sind Horse. He describes a small bay of horse-shoe shape, near Sonmyanee, as more nearly corresponding with the Sarranga of Arrian than any other between Cape Monze and Sonmyanee. Further on water is scarce and brackish, and the walls, as described by Arrian become unfit for use after a few days' working. A great salt lake is near. Hoozmara, 35 miles from the mouth of the Hingol river, is peopled by a hardy race of fishermen, and is the only inhabited spot in Mekrak subject to the Jam of Beyla, who, to our surprise, is said to be loved by his people. "His rule seems mild and unoppressive, and his people, if denied wealth, are certainly in the enjoyment of happy contentment." Slaves are to be found doing the severe work all along the coast to Gwadel, but they seldom flee, which they might easily do in the various boats on the coast. Gwadel has an old fort with high walls, within which the traders send all their wealth at night, through fear of a raid from Kedge or the highlands outside. A few rusty guns, useless, if not dangerous, are mounted for defence. Between Kurrachee and the Poorally river, called by Arrian the Arabis bay, is the country of the Arabii, a people accepted as Indians. Along this coast line are still many recognisable points, as Cape Monze for "Eirus" and Chilney Island for "Bibacta." Of Arrian's commodious harbour between the two honoured by the name of Alexander there is hardly a trace remaining. Dr. Lalor makes a very successful attempt at establishing some identity between the prominent points now actually found and those mentioned by the Greek historians of Alexander and Nearchus.

THE PARSEES.—The commission appointed last year to inquire into the "usages recognised as laws by the Parsee community of India, and the necessity of special legislation in connection with them," are reported to have urged "the necessity and recommended the advisability of special legislation for the Parsees of India in general and of Bombay in particular." A code of laws adapted to the condition of the Parsee community has long been needed. The report, which has been already forwarded to the Governor of Bombay, and which will be transmitted by his Excellency to the Governor-general in Council, has been drawn up by the president of the commission, Sir Joseph Arnould.

WRECK OF THE "COLOMBO."—We (Madras Times) are in receipt of a little more information respecting the wreck of the Colombo. As already stated, this ill-fated steamer ran on to the Minicoy rock, on the morning of the 19th of November, during thick, hazy, and rainy weather, with a strong breeze blowing from the south. Warps were immediately run on shore, and the boats were lowered. The ladies and children were first landed, and afterwards the remainder of the passengers. Tents were immediately erected, and all the baggage and stores that could be got at were brought ashore. The greater portion of the stock was saved, and about one hundred boxes of mails, and about a similar quantity of silk. Unfortunately none of the Indian, China, or Ceylon mails had been recovered, the room in which they were stowed being under water. The following morning the ship broke in two, but there is every chance of a great quantity of cargo being yet saved, should the weather prove fine. The passengers and crew were all well, and in good spirits, when the third officer left the Island on the evening of the 21st. He states that every assistance was rendered by the natives; and that after the passengers had lived two days in tents, they removed to the village, about two miles to the westward of the spot whereon the ship struck, and they were made as comfortable as circumstances would admit.

ADEN.—We are informed that his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, Sir William Mansfield, has recommended that a full regiment of European Infantry, instead of only a wing as heretofore, shall for the future constitute a part of the Aden garrison. We also hear that the Camp Church at Aden, which was commenced to be built some years ago on a hill about two hundred feet above the plain, but which was never completed, and has remained for a long time in statu quo, is now to be pulled down and rebuilt on the plain. New barracks are also to be built for the excess of European troops now required for Aden. Amongst a number of other curious circumstances that have recently come to light, it is related that two French regiments were reported to have passed through, or, we presume, touched at and passed on their way from Aden without the authorities of that place knowing anything about it until some time afterwards! These regiments were on their way to Saigon, in Cochin China.—Deccan Herald.

ADULTERATION OF COTTON.—The Bombay Review records the vigorous proceedings of the cotton commission recently appointed in destroying and confiscating adulterated cotton. An experiment was made the other day at a spinning mill in Bombay with a quantity of Broach cotton, and the loss on manufacturing it into cloth, from the admixture of seed and dirt, was fully 25 per cent. One or two large dealers have been sentenced each to six months' imprisonment with hard labour, and the rest have asked Government to establish the supervision which was suspended a year ago, at the very time when it was most required.

PRINCIPLE OF MUNIFICENCE.—The Bombay Gazette records the generous offer of the wealthy Jew merchant, David Sassoon, to contribute Rs. 50,000 for the erection, and Rs. 100,000 for the endowment, of a hospital at Poonah, for 200 patients, with two wings devoted to lying-in and vaccination purposes. The Governor has expressed his sense of the truly philanthropic and charitable character of the proposal, has accepted on behalf of her Majesty's Government the conditions on which it has been made, and has appointed a committee to carry out the design.

BOMBAY STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY.—The shareholders of the Bombay Steam Navigation Company have disposed of the whole of their property for three lacs of rupees.

LIEUT.-GENERAL SCHNIEHILL, Commander-in-Chief of the Dutch Army, in the East Indies, embarked from Bombay on the 29th November under a salute of fifteen guns, for Singapore.

SMALL CAUSE COURTS.—It is in contemplation to establish Small Cause Courts at Belgaum, at Surat, and at Ahmednugger, the Judges to be taken from the Civil Service.

CAPT. C. B. KER has been appointed Executive Engineer in N. Canara. Capt. Ker is employing convict labour on the roads.

MAJOR-GENERAL SMITH, C.B., has assumed command of the Poona Division of the army.

THE VICTORIA CROSS was presented at a grand parade at Saugor on the 19th November to Lieut. T. Cadell, late of the 2nd European Fusiliers.

VISHNU KOOLKURNI, the murderer of Mr. Manson, C.S., has been captured at Punderpoor; sentence of death has been pronounced upon him.

DELHI PRIZE MONEY.—We (Englishman) are sorry to state from inquiries which we have made upon the subject, that those whose hopes and expectations tend towards a further indulgence of Delhi prize-money had better restrict their visions to something very light and airy, as any future instalment that may be forthcoming will be of very attenuated proportions indeed. In the commencement of the year it was calculated that the next instalments of this prize-money to be issued would be larger than the first; but since then the authorities having admitted, or encouraged, or invited, the claims of all descriptions of forces, contingents, and co-operatives, camp followers, syces, kalasses, sweepers, coolies, &c., the shares of the real captors of Delhi have dwindled down to infinitesimal smallness, and will, we fear, be scarce worth the taking. Thus end the profits and rewards of the army of Delhi.

MEDICAL DUTIES AT THE PRESIDENCY.

Nov. 29.—No. 645.—H.E. the Hon. the Gov. in Council is pleased to direct that from the 1st Dec. next the med. duties of the Presy. shall be distributed according to the following arrangement, instead of that now existing:—

The island of Bombay being divided into three dists., and a medical officer appointed to each district.
1st District.—Will comprise Malabar Hill, Breach Candy, Tardeo, and Girgaum.

Dependent Duties.—Attendance upon all covenanted and uncovenanted civil servants and military staff officers living in the district. All officers, civil and military, on leave or on medical certificate residing within the district.

2nd District.—Colaba, the Forte, and Esplanade.

Dependent Duties.—Ditto ditto.

3rd District.—Byculla, with the Grant and Bellassis roads, Mazagon, Chintzpoogly, and Parel.

Dependent Duties.—Ditto, and will perform the duties of police surg., and have charge of the Byculla schools.

The medical officers appointed to these situations will receive the official designation of presy. surgeon, 1st, 2nd, and 3rd districts respectively, and will be required to reside within their respective districts.

As a rule surgeons only will be eligible for the appointment of presy. surgeon. They will receive a consolidated salary of Rupees (900) nine hundred monthly. Should an assistant surgeon be appointed, the salary will be Rupees (700) seven hundred monthly.

The surgeon of the 2nd district will have the bungalow now occupied by the assistant garrison surgeon on the Esplanade, placed at his disposal as a residence on the same conditions as held by the assistant garrison surgeon.

Consequent upon the above order, the appoints. of civil surgeon, asst. civil surgeon, garrison surgeon, and asst. garrison surgeon and deputy medical storekeeper, Bombay, will cease from Dec. 1 next.

To preserve the due responsibility of the medical officers with respect to granting medical certificates to enable patients to appear before the standing in the medical committee, it is to be understood that in the cases of civil officers the district surgeons will be responsible to the civil departments, and in that of military officers to the C. in C.

From the above date, consequent on the foregoing arrangement, the native garrison hospital at the presidency is abolished; and the lascars, store and tent, of the grand arsenal, the gun carriage, and garrison engineer's departments, will be treated in the hospital of the marine battalion. The compounder at present attached to the native general hospital is to be transferred to the marine battalion, for the purpose of making up the prescriptions of the presidency surgeons, 1st and 2nd districts.

H.E. the C. in C. will be good enough to issue such subsidiary orders as may be necessary with reference to military officers conforming to these rules.

No. 646.—With reference to G.O. No. 645, of this date, the following appts. are made:—
Surgeon maj. Arbuckle, M.D., to be presidency surgeon of 1st district.

Surgeon maj. Manisty to be presidency surgeon of 2nd district.

Asst. surgeon Haines, M.B., to be presidency surgeon of 3rd district.

Hindoostanee (Staff Test).

Brev. capt. J. D. Hall, 4th regt. N.I. (rifles).

Lieut. H. French, gen. list, attached to 4th regt. N.I. (rifles).

REGISTRATION OF OFFICERS.

Dec. 6.—No. 1,171.—With a view of providing for the due preparation of all documents connected with officers borne on the strength of the army, the C. in C. directs that officers of the general list, when once attached to a regiment, shall continue to be borne on the rolls of the corps, notwithstanding that they may be subsequently admitted into the staff corps, proceed on furlough to Europe, or be appointed to a staff situation.

In the event of such officers being transferred to other corps, all necessary documents connected with them should be handed over to the regiment to which an officer is transferred.

EXAMINATIONS.

No. 1,172.—The C. in C. is pleased to announce that officers who may be rejected by the civil and military examination committee, as not having qualified themselves for the several tests required, shall not be allowed to appear again for examination until after three months from the date of their failure.

BARRACK MASTERS.

No. 1,173.—With the sanction of Government, and with reference to G.O. No. 573, of Oct. 27, the C. in C. is pleased to intimate that, as the staff salary of barrack masters is indivisible, and can only be claimed by the officer actually performing the duties, the provisions of paragraph 4, G.O. No. 645, of July 20, 1859, have been extended to barrack masters when transferred from one station to another, and also barrack sergeants to the extent allowed by existing regulations.

No. 1,174.—The undermentioned officers of the general list are attached to regiments as follows, and are to be accounted for in the returns, &c., of their respective corps, but will remain with the regiment with which they are now doing duty:—

Cornet Owen, to 1st regt. L.C.

Cornet McNeill, to 2nd regt. L.C.

Cornet Fagan, to 3rd regt. L.C.

No. 1,175.—Asst. surg. G. C. Bell is appt. to medical charge of the Southern Mahratta horse, v. Wilson.

No. 1,179.—Leave of absence:—

10th Regt. N.I.—Ens. J. A. Rowlandson, from 1st to 31st Dec., in ext., m.c., to remain at Mahableshwar.

16th Regt. N.I.—Lieut. G. Bannister, from Nov. 26 to Dec. 31, in ext., to remain in Bombay, m.c.

17th Regt. N.I.—Lieut. G. E. Blew, from Nov. 28 to Dec. 28, m.c., within the limits of the division.

24th Regt. N.I.—Capt. J. Wauchope, from Dec. 1 to Dec. 31, to remain in Bombay, m.c.

Dec. 6.—No. 979.—2nd Capt. F. Swanson, on being relieved of the appt. of acting comy. of ordnance, Belgium, will join his baty., No. 5, 18th brig., royal art., at that station.

THE MEDICAL SERVICE.

The C. in C. is pleased to direct the publication of the following letter from the Govt. of India:—

No. 980.—From Lieut. col. H. W. Norman, C.B., Secy. to the Govt. of India, Military Dept., to the Secy. to Govt., Fort St. George, Military Dept.—(No. 445, dated Fort William Nov. 15, 18 2.)

SIR,—In reply to your letter, No. 3,827, dated 6th inst., I am directed to acquaint you that, until any instructions are received from the Home Govt. on the subject, or for the amalgamation of the medical services, officers of the Indian medical service must be posted, or continue posted, to the new brigades and batteries of royal art. as well as to the new British regts.

2. They will, of course, whilst so employed, be subject to orders from the head of the British med. dept., in their presidencies, but their pay and position will be in all respects unaffected by the arrangement.

With the sanction of Govt., the C. in C. is pleased to republish the following G.O. for the information and guidance of H.M.'s British regts. and battys:—

Bombay Castle, Nov. 27.—No. 641.—Lieut. H. L. Hall, H.M.'s 103rd Royal Bombay fus., has a furl. to Europe for 6 mo., without pay.

No. 642.—The underment officer is admitted as probationer to the Bombay Staff Corps, subject to the conditions prescribed in paras. 79 and 80 of G.O.G.G. No. 332 of 1861:—

Lieut. R. T. Thompson, 56th foot, adjt. of the general depot.

Dec. 3.—No. 653.—Staff Asst. surg. J. Watt is brought on the strength of H.M.'s British forces serving in the Bombay Pres., from Nov. 20, the date of his arrival at Bombay.—Erratum.—In G.O. Nos. 610 and 622, dated Nov. 11 and 14, for the words "brought on the strength of the Bombay army," read "brought on the strength of H.M.'s forces serving in the Bombay Pres."

NAVAL.

Marine Dept., Bombay Castle, Nov. 28.—The following notification by the commissioner in Scinde, dated Oct. 10, is confirmed:—

Mr. Sandison, acting master, and Ballameah, moon-shee, were employed on special duty in paying the fuel and pilot establishments, and making over the Government depots of wood fuel to the agent Scinde railway Kotla and forest ranger, between Kotree and Moclian, from Aug. 20 to Sept. 17, both days inclusive.

Mr. F. Forster, acting master I.N., was employed on special duty from Sept. 17 to 30, both days inclusive, in charge of a large quantity of Government stores during their conveyance from Kotree to Kur-rachee for sale.

MAILS TO INDIA.

Mails to India and China, via Marseilles, are despatched from London as follows, viz.:—Those for Bombay packets, on the evening of the 3rd and 18th of each month; and those for Calcutta packets (including mails for Ceylon, Madras, and China), on the evenings of the 10th and 26th of each month. When any of these dates falls on a Sunday, the mails are made up on the following evening. Letters and Newspapers can be forwarded to any part of India, via Bombay and Marseilles, and in most cases will reach their destination some days sooner than if despatched by the following Calcutta mail. The Bombay mails via Southampton, however, are no longer available for the transmission of Letters or Newspapers to the Madras Presidency. Mails for the Mediterranean and all parts of India and China, except the Bombay Presidency, are despatched via Southampton on the mornings of the 4th and 20th, or, when either of these dates falls on Sunday, upon the previous evening. Mails for North-West Provinces of Bengal and China, are despatched via Southampton, on the 12th and 27th of the month, except when these dates fall on Sunday, in which case they are forwarded on the previous evening.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

RETROSPECT OF 1862.

THE year that has just closed has been, so far as India is concerned, entirely devoid of those startling scenes and events which give a vulgar interest to the historic page. There have been no brilliant victories, no glorious triumphs to record; nor, on the other hand, are there any calamities to deplore. So profound has been the tranquillity of the past twelve months that petty disturbances on the frontier, which at any other period would have passed unnoticed, have been magnified to serious troubles, and considered worthy of alarmist "leaders" in the local journals. At one time the old rumour of the circulation of chupatties destroyed the peace of mind of timorous individuals in the North-West, just as a little later in the year a similar report perplexed, "with fear of change," a few of the European residents in the Deccan. Nothing, however, happened to justify any apprehension either at Agra or in the South, although an encyclical letter from Mecca, exhorting the Faithful to purify their hearts and amend their lives, supervened to inspire additional terror.

On the North-Eastern frontier several daring raids into British territory have, undoubtedly, been made by the neighbouring tribes of barbarous mountaineers. Sometimes it was the Bhotanese who threatened Darjeeling, and sometimes the Khasiahs who struck a panic into Sylhet. At other times, again, we heard of depredations in Assam committed by the Abors, or of a descent of the Garrows from their wild fastnesses, or of an impending invasion of the Jynteah district. Clouds no bigger than a man's hand were continually descried on the horizon, but, fortunately, the only rain that fell came down in the natural form of fertilising showers, and if the thunder growled and the lightning flashed, it was at least not in a metaphorical sense.

But while the Calcutta papers contented themselves, perforce, with mild shudders at the thought of a hasty visit from the Abors, Garrows, Khasiahs, and Bhotanese, their up-country contemporaries trembled with well simulated affright at the prospect of beholding Turkomans at Lahore and Cossacks at Agra. Sultan Ahmed Jan, the ruler of Herat, was marching upon Cabul at the head of an army of 50,000 Persian auxiliaries, drilled by Russian officers, and paid with Russian gold. That chief did, indeed, invade the territories of the Ameer, and even succeeded in wresting from him for a while the fortified town of Furrak, but his triumph was transitory, and, according to the latest accounts, he was himself loosely invested in his own city of Herat. The Persians, however, have only appeared upon the scene in the character of peace-makers, and through the friendly offices of the envoy of the Shah a thorough reconciliation is likely to be effected between the two warlike kinsmen.

The last embers of the sepoy revolt have been crushed under foot, unless it be true that Nana Sahib is still alive in the jungles of Nepaul. His nephew, Rao Sahib, has, at least, been cleverly captured, tried for his life, capitally convicted, and hanged, hard by the ruined palace of Bithoor. Mogul Beg, the murderer of Mr. and Miss Jennings, of Captain Douglas and Miss Clifford, has in like manner expiated his crimes on the very spot where they were committed. Other rebels and murderers of lesser note have in various ways been "accounted for," and now it is said that another of Bajee Rao's adopted sons, Madhoo Rao by name, has been seized in the Southern Mahratta country by Captain Nuttall. It is time, however, to turn to pleasanter and more important topics, and to survey the material and moral progress achieved by the Indian Government during the year that has elapsed.

On the 18th January the Governor-general's Legislative Council met in Calcutta for the first time, and under the happiest auspices. But such is the fatality attendant on an Indian career, that of the fifteen distinguished personages who assembled on that day three have already been snatched away by death. Great expectations were formed of the good results likely to be attained by associating native princes and nobles with the European counsellors of the Viceroy, and thus far these anticipations have not been disappointed. The Councils of Madras and Bombay did not hold their first meeting until the 22nd, nor have their deliberations been marked by much vigour or sagacity.

Another improvement in the Government machinery was the amalgamation of the Supreme and Sudder Courts. The High Court of Calcutta sat for the first time on the 7th July, and those of Bombay and Madras, respectively, on the 14th and 16th of August. The Financial Department, likewise, has been reorganised and placed in a state of efficiency, so that we shall scarcely again be puzzled and scandalised by repeated errors and corrections in a single Budget. It may also be possible for the present Financial Minister to ascertain exactly whether or not a Cash Balance means a balance of cash, and also the real difference between surplus and deficit. Still, after making ample allowance for the looseness of Mr. Laing's calculations and his peculiar notions on the subject of exchange, there is fair reason to believe that expenditure has at length been equalled by income, and a financial equilibrium actually brought about. Under the firm conviction that such would be the case Mr. Laing remitted the Licence-tax entirely—even returning to the tax-payers half-a-million sterling that had already been collected—and abolished the Income-tax of two per cent. on incomes not exceeding £50 per annum. How far he was justified at the time in resigning these and other sources of revenue need not now be discussed, but the immediate consequence of his optimism was a controversy and a collision with her Majesty's Secretary of State for India, which put a sudden termination to his career as the Financial Councillor of the Governor-general. It is only fair to add that the non-official European residents in India, the most intelligent natives of that country, and the mercantile community in England, have expressed much regret at Mr. Laing's resignation of his post, though now consoled by the appointment of Sir Charles Trevelyan as his successor.

The new Paper Currency came into operation on the 1st March, but its sphere is at present too limited to give it a fair chance of success. A new copper and silver coinage, too, has been issued, bearing the effigy of the Sovereign, and supplanting the old Company's symbols of royal power. It may further be mentioned that the Money Order system has been introduced, as an experiment, into Bengal, previous to its larger development for the convenience of the public in all parts of the empire.

In order to give strength and unity to the outlying provinces of Pegu, Arracan, Moulmain, Martaban, Amherst, and Tenasserim, they have been consolidated into the Chief Commissionership of "British Burmah," and placed under the firm and enlightened administration of Colonel Phayre. In the same spirit the much-neglected territories of the Nerbudda, Saugor, and Nagpore, have been constituted into the Chief Commissionership of the Central Provinces, and have at present the advantage of being administered by Mr. Temple. Another territorial modification has been the transfer of North Canara from the feeble government of Madras to the more vigorous rule of the Western Presidency. Sir Bartle Frere, who succeeded Sir George Clerk as Governor of Bombay, has already fixed upon the site for a capital and issued his fiat for the construction of passable roads in all necessary directions. The same energetic ruler has drawn attention to the absence of accommodation for railway travellers, and has ordered the erection of proper bungalows for Europeans, of suitable serais for Natives, and of convenient sheds and bazaars for traders and carriers. Connecting roads, too, are to be made between the main lines of railway and large towns lying at a short distance on either side.

The whole question, indeed, of internal communication has received an extraordinary stimulus from the interruption of the cotton supply from the Southern States of North America to Liverpool. Not only has the British Government offered considerable prizes to encourage the growth of that valuable staple, but even the Native Princes are beginning to appreciate the marvellous opportunity that is presented to India, and in many instances have abolished the transit duties on cotton. Tramways and light railways—the latter through the initiative of Mr. J. E. Wilson, C.E.—are in the course of construction, with a view to bring to the trunk lines the produce of the interior. The railway from Umritsur to Lahore has been opened for traffic, to the unbounded astonishment of the Punjabees, who, in their simple wonder, question the power even of Brahma to create such a wondrous monster as a Locomotive. A Steam Navigation Company has likewise been formed to provide easy and regular communication between Calcutta and the ports of British Burmah, while, to crown all, a new line of steamers from Marseilles represents the rivalry of France, and bids the too-secure P. and O.

Company to think a little more of the comfort of their passengers and a little less of their own profits—which, by the way, are likely to be diminished by the recent loss of the Colombo on Minnicoy Island.

Among other signs of progress may be placed the introduction of the Cinchona plant into the Eastern Himalayas, and still more so the great increase of Tea plantations. It is to be feared, indeed, that the latter have been somewhat checked by Sir Charles Wood's emendations of Lord Canning's famous Resolution on Waste Lands, but the objectionable clause requiring all lands to be put up to auction will surely be amended before long. A liberal spirit, too, is shown in the permission granted to public servants to hold land, and Lord Canning, towards the close of his Viceroyalty, openly manifested his desire to encourage European settlements, even rebuking so great a personage as the Lieutenant-governor of Bengal for his fractious and malevolent opposition to his own countrymen. Lord Elgin, who ascended the Viceregal Musnud on the 13th of March, has expressed himself equally in favour of the introduction of European enterprise; but thus far his lordship has scarcely appeared as a Power acting of its own accord, except on the occasion of taking the chair at the Great Meeting held in the Town-hall of Calcutta for the Relief of the Distress in Lancashire. Parenthetically it may be here remarked that India has come forward nobly to assist the patient and much-enduring operatives of England,—Native Princes and merchants vying with Europeans in the amount of their largesses.

If any proof, however, were wanted to show the rapid progress made by India during the last few years, the Indian Court at the International Exhibition must suffice to convince the most incredulous. Instead of mere gorgeous tinsel and barbaric splendour, there were exhibited the most beautiful fabrics, the most exquisite carvings, and a rare collection of vegetable and mineral products. In the Algerian Court there may have been exhibited richer trappings and arms of greater price, but all that was wanting which indicates the well doing of the industrious classes, and the safe prosperity of the people at large. Calcutta may, or may not, be the most eligible site for a Capital—and the point has been hotly discussed during the past year—and Bombay Harbour may be exposed to an enemy while its Fort is only a nuisance—two drawbacks about to disappear—but it cannot be denied that the English yoke is light and even beneficial, where that of France is heavy and debasing.

The abolition of the Indian Navy has, at length, been accomplished, but so liberal has been the treatment of every branch of that admirable Service that no one has any grounds for complaint. The organization of the Staff Corps has also been completed, but by no means in a manner to insure general satisfaction. Very few officers of the English army have been willing to join it, as they would in consequence forfeit the value of their commissions. For the present this is comparatively of trifling importance; but when the officers of the old Indian army begin to die out it will be necessary to rescind the objectionable condition. The retiring scheme proposed by Sir Charles Wood was only partially successful, and thus a larger number of officers remained to be provided for than was either desired or anticipated. A very extensive reduction, however, was made in the Madras army, which now consists of twenty-nine batteries of artillery, two regiments of European cavalry, and eleven of European infantry, with four regiments of Native cavalry, and forty-four of Native infantry. The Volunteer Force, on the other hand, has been warmly encouraged by Lord Elgin, and in the larger stations has been placed on a very respectable footing.

After waiting five years for the substantial reward of their patience and valour, the heroes of Delhi have at last received the first instalment of their prize-money; and orders have actually been issued for the distribution of the Lucknow prize likewise. An excellent experiment has been introduced into the British army serving in India by the establishment of regimental workshops, which have thus far been found to fulfil the most sanguine expectations. In other respects, too, the moral and sanitary condition of the British soldier has been made the subject of much serious consideration, but which failed to arrest the progress of cholera until after many valuable lives were lost.

Sir Hugh Rose, after winning golden opinions by his energetic inspection of the North-West Frontier, has contrived to lose the respect of all men not immediately interested in his retention of office. By an unpardonable caprice or prejudice he endeavoured, though happily in vain, to withhold from Colonel Travers the Victoria Cross awarded to him by his Sovereign for his chivalrous bearing during the mutiny at Indore. Since then he has arbitrarily and without due inquiry superseded Brigadier Burney at Dinapore, and cast an unmerited disgrace on a very distinguished officer. He has further roused the indignation of the army by his illegal and uncalled for remarks on the Court-martial held at Mhow to try Paymaster Smales, of the Inniskilling Dragoons. And, by way of climax, he has espoused the cause of an officer who displayed a deplorable flunkeyism in reporting a private conversation in which the Commander-in-Chief was spoken of in terms of disrespect. The expulsion of Colonel Priestley from the Bengal United Service Club, and the resignation of Sir Hugh Rose as its Honorary President, have formed the most exciting topic of table-talk that has occurred for a long time past to enliven, or agitate, society in India.

The leading scandal in commercial circles has been the accusation brought against Messrs. Donald Mackey and Carter of improperly applying to their own advantage the property of the Assam Tea Company, of which they were influential Directors, but a strict and unfriendly investigation into all the circumstances of the case failed to prove more than great irregularity, for which their brother Directors were nearly as blameable as themselves. The action for libel and defamation of character instituted against Mr., now Sir, John Peter Grant by Mr. McArthur resulted in a verdict for the plaintiff, but, as the latter was unable to show that he had sustained any material damage, he gained his victory at the price of heavy costs. Even thus he was more fortunate than Jadoonathjee Maharajah, of Bombay, who brought a similar action against Kursedass Mooljee, Editor of the Satya Prakash, and obtained no other result than the exposure of the most disgraceful practices on the part of himself and the other members of a degraded priesthood. Another native, the grandson of Prince Gholam Mahomed and great-grandson of Tippoo Sahib, was convicted of attempting to pass off a ten-rupee note for one of a hundred rupees, and sentenced to seven years' penal servitude in Alipore Gaol.

In the year 1862 there have been no further disturbances in the Indigo districts, though a feeling of estrangement still exists between planters and ryots. The "Great Rent Case," decided by Sir Barnes Peacock in favour of Mr. James Hills, of Nischindipore, recognises the right of a landlord to raise his rent to a fair and reasonable extent, and thus the planter-zemindars will be partially indemnified for the refusal of their tenants to cultivate indigo.

The Obituary of the past year includes the names of not a few who will be sorely and sincerely regretted by all who love their country. Colonel Baird Smith, though he actually died in the December of 1861, may be enumerated among the martyrs of 1862, in our annual retrospect. Sir John Inglis, K.C.B., the gallant defender of the Lucknow Residency; Captain Henderson, C.B., the greatly-respected Deputy-Commissioner of Kohat; the Rev. Joseph Wolff, made famous by his journey to Bokhara; Colonel Cuthbert Davidson, C.B., the much-abused Resident at Hyderabad; General Cullen, for many years Resident at the Native Courts of Travancore and Cochin; and Mr. James Hume, Senior Magistrate of Calcutta, may all be classed among the good and faithful servants whose death is a public loss. A loyal and trusty ally was lost to the British Government when the Maharajah of Putiala departed this life, while the world was freed from an imbecile dotard when the ex-King of Delhi breathed his last at Rangoon. But a real calamity befell the nation when Earl Canning was gathered to his fathers in the prime of life and in the full enjoyment of a clear and vigorous intellect.

Intestine disturbances have convulsed the Chinese Empire throughout the whole of the past year. If the Taepings have failed to make much progress, their failure is chiefly attributable to the armed intervention of the French and English forces, who have wrested from the possession of the rebels the cities of Ningpo, Fungwha, and Kahding, besides some towns of lesser note. In the nominal capacity of Prime Minister, Prince Kung is the virtual ruler of the empire, and has thus far displayed a liberal and just disposition.

The foreign relations of Japan are, and have been, in a very unsatisfactory condition. That island-empire is divided into two political parties, the one in favour of, the other opposed to, intercourse with foreign nations; and the Tycoon, unable to restrain or reconcile his refractory nobles, is reported to have adopted the desperate measure of inviting the assistance of the British. The Ambassadors who have lately visited this and the other principal countries of Europe will, probably, on their return to their native land convince their fellow-countrymen of the utter impossibility of again closing their ports against foreign traders.

INDIAN FAMINE RELIEF FUND AND LANCASHIRE DISTRESS.

On Friday a special meeting of gentlemen who had served on the General Committee for managing the Indian Famine Relief Fund in 1860-61 was convened at the Mansion-house, to take into consideration a letter addressed by Lord Elgin, the Viceroy of India, to the Lord Mayor, proposing to make the surplus balance of that fund available for the relief of the distress in Lancashire. There were present the Lord Mayor, Sir Edward Ryan, Sir Robert Hamilton, Sir Ranald Martin, Sir F. Halliday, Mr. Arthur Kinnaird, M.P., Mr. Alderman Finnis, Mr. S. Gregson, M.P., Major R. G. Macgregor, Mr. J. Arbuthnot, Colonel Wilkinson, Colonel Holland, Mr. W. Dent, Mr. P. Cazenove, Mr. W. J. Maxwell, Deputy Obbard, Mr. H. Ghinn, Mr. J. M'Pherson, Mr. W. C. Plowden, Mr. W. Hartridge, Mr. C. Jay, Mr. S. P. Lowe, and Mr. Goodman.

The despatch of the Governor-general was read to the meeting by Mr. Low, one of the hon. secretaries. It was dated on the 17th of November, and given in our last issue, but, as the subsequent discussion turned entirely upon the letter, it is necessary to state its purport. Lord Elgin said, so deep and general was the sympathy which the prevailing distress in the cotton manufacturing districts had awakened in India, that the Government had been strongly urged to remit the unappropriated surplus of the famine fund at once to the Lord Mayor, to be applied towards the relief of the Lancashire people. The Government of India did not consider that, as trustees of this surplus, they should be justified in diverting it on their own and sole responsibility from its original destination; but they thought that, under the circumstances, they might inform the Lord Mayor that, if acting on behalf of the subscribers, he should be of opinion that it might, without impropriety, be applied in the manner indicated, the Government of India would heartily concur in giving effect to that opinion. The Governor-general added that the precise amount of surplus was not then ascertained, as certain claims arising out of the famine of 1860 were still unadjusted; but the Lord Mayor's draughts on the Government of India for £20,000 would at once be honoured, should his lordship see fit to add this contribution to the funds placed at his disposal for the relief of their suffering fellow-subjects in Lancashire.

In reply to a question as to the probable amount of the surplus, Mr. Low said the Times, quoting from a Calcutta newspaper, had estimated it at £80,000, but the secretaries in this country had no official information as to the precise sum.

The Lord Mayor said it remained for the meeting to determine what should be done in the matter. He added, in reply to Colonel Wilkinson, that he had received a letter from the Lord Provost of Glasgow, stating that the inhabitants of that city, who subscribed £6,000 or £7,000 to the Indian Famine Relief Fund, were now many of them suffering distress from the dearth of cotton, and asking, in the event of the surplus being sent back from India, that they should share in it pro rata. He had received similar appeals from the Mayor of Coventry and Mr. Newdegate, M.P., on behalf of the riband weavers.

Mr. Maxwell spoke of the metropolitan charities, which depended almost wholly on voluntary support, having languished for some time past by the public bounty having been turned almost entirely in the direction of Lancashire.

Sir Edward Ryan said it was out of the question for them to endeavour to make the proceeding on which they were engaged exactly regular or legal. They received this large fund when acting as a committee with reference to the famine in India, on a particular trust which they endeavoured to discharge to the best of their ability by transmitting the money as it reached them, from time to time, to the constituted authorities in India for distribution, and that done, their functions as a committee ceased some time ago—(hear). Although, however, they could not, in a manner strictly legal, deal with a fund over which they had really no control, they might be justified under the circumstances in taking the step indicated by the letter of the Governor-general—(hear). The Bengal Chamber of Commerce at Calcutta, which took a conspicuous part at the time in appealing to this country for money, and afterwards in distributing it, had strongly urged the Government of India to apply the surplus to the relief of a similar calamity in England, and now Lord Elgin was willing to remit £20,000 for that purpose if the Lord Mayor thought fit to accept it. There was, therefore, a sort of combined trust—Lord Elgin indicating the application of the money, with the assent of the persons interested in its disposal, and simply requesting that they who had been the managing committee of the fund in London should concur in the arrangement. The surplus was now in lump, and they could not now discriminate where it came from, whether from north or south, with reference to any claim by the people of Glasgow, Coventry, or elsewhere; while it seemed to him difficult, supposing there was any doubt as to the propriety of the application of the fund to Lancashire, to apply it to any of the charities in this great city. A strong and urgent appeal had been made to the whole country for the relief of the distress among the cotton operatives, and he thought an application of the £20,000 to that purpose would meet with the general approbation of the subscribers—(hear).

Mr. Arbuthnot, doubting that the meeting had any power to give authority to the Lord Mayor, suggested that any resolution they might come to on the subject should simply express their opinion that the Lord Mayor ought to accept the proposal of the Governor-general of India.

The Lord Mayor held that they were still the trustees of the fund, and that he being, by virtue of his office, only their chairman for the time being, unless he had a distinct, emphatic, and reliable indemnity from them as to the application of the surplus to the amount specified and in the manner indicated in Lord Elgin's despatch he could not assume the responsibility of disposing of it—(hear).

Mr. Low read a letter addressed to him by Sir Robert Hamilton, resident in Warwickshire, pleading on behalf of the distressed riband weavers at Coventry, Nuneaton, and other places for aid from the returned fund, to which, he said, the county of Warwick was among the first to contribute.

After some further discussion, in which Mr. Arthur Kinnaird, M.P., Major Macgregor, Mr. Gregson, M.P., and others took part, it was unanimously resolved, "That the Lord Mayor be authorised to draw upon the Government of India for £20,000, and that the amount be paid to the Mansion-house Committee of the Lancashire Relief Fund, in conformity with the letter of the Governor-General of India of the 17th of November last."

THE TELEGRAPH TO INDIA.

Before this time twelvemonth the wire will be laid, and London, in point of time, within twelve hours' distance not only of Bombay, Madras, and Calcutta, but of the furthest limits of our Eastern Indian frontier beyond Rangoon! It is quite unnecessary to enter here into a consideration of the important questions which make it absolutely necessary that the Home Government should have a line of communication of their own to India. The reasons will suggest themselves at once to all our readers. It is also, perhaps, needless to explain how the mismanagement of the Red Sea line, which was never apparently made to work for long, and which was laid as if it was never meant to work at all, prevented that cable from supplying the wants of the Government. It is sufficient to say that the lesson which the Government and the Treasury then received warned them to undertake the matter themselves if they wished to prosper. The India Board have accordingly intrusted the entire superintendence and control of the whole plan to Col. Patrick Stewart, R.E., as well known for his services during the Indian mutiny as for his labours in connection with telegraphs throughout India. This gentleman has chosen Sir Charles Bright and Mr. Latimer Clark, electrical engineers, for the undertaking and for submerging the line. Every detail is now arranged, and the work begun, and, as we have said, before this day twelvemonth we shall have our news every morning from India. Colonel Stewart has himself during the last two years travelled through and examined the various overland routes which have been from time to time suggested for a part of this line across the Turkish portion of Asia Minor. One of these has been selected from the greater ease with which land lines are erected and kept in repair as compared with submarine wires, and also because along at least three-fourths of the route the Turkish Government have already established and keep in admirable working order a telegraph from Constantinople to Bagdad. This land line runs from Sautari on the Bosphorus across Asia Minor to Diarbekir, thence to Mossul (the ancient Nineveh), and thence to Bagdad. It happens, however, that over the broad tract of country which intervenes between Bagdad and the head of the Persian Gulf, along which the submarine cable to India is to be laid, various predatory tribes of Arabs claim a sovereignty, and fight for it with more or less success, and over these lawless vagabonds of the desert the Porte has about the same control as Sir Joshua Jebb enjoys over his ticket-of-leave men. Always quarrelling among themselves, they agree only on the one point of disobeying and defying their nominal lord the Sultan. These people will require skilful handling, and the land line from Bagdad will most probably be taken along the frontiers of Arabia, through the territories of the most powerful of the tribes, who are able to protect it against all comers, and whom a subsidy of £1,000 a-year will at once render most willing. By this route, for a length of some 300 miles, it will pass to the head of the Persian Gulf at the broad estuary which marks the junction of the Tigris and Euphrates—an eastern township called Shat-el-Arab.

It is not intended, however, to rely solely upon this route. Another land line will most probably be taken from Bagdad over the frontier of Persia to Teheran, thence to Ispahan, and so on by Shiraz down to the shore of the Persian Gulf at Bushire. Thus, even in case of the Arabs ever proving refractory, there will always be the land line through Persia to Bagdad, and so on to Constantinople and England. From the estuary at Shat-el-Arab the submarine portion of the line is to be laid in three sections; for, though the length of the whole is only 1,010 miles, yet the Government have most wisely determined to avoid the dangers which always beset telegraphy through long deep-sea routes by making no less than three breaks at the stations at which the cable will be landed. The first length will be from the head of the Persian Gulf at Shat-el-Arab to Bushire, a distance of 170 miles, along which the cable will be submerged in from 20 to 25 fathoms of water. The next length will be from Bushire to Mussendom, a bold, desolate, stony headland on the coast of Arabia. This section will be 440 miles long, and submerged in from 30 to 35 fathoms of water. The third length will be from Mussendom to Guaddel, a small city on the Mekran coast, on the frontier of the Kelat territory. This portion will be 400 miles long, and laid in from 40 to 50 fathoms of water. From Guaddel a short length of land line is now almost complete along the coast, giving direct communication with Kurrachee, and thence all over India. The submarine portion of the line is, of course, its most important part, and in the manufacture every care will be bestowed which the recent improvements in the science of telegraphy show to be advisable. The copper conductor is to be unusually large, composed of four segmental wires drawn into one—a new method, combining the advantages of a conductor formed of many strands, while obviating the drawbacks upon that mode of construction. This conductor is to be insulated with four coatings of gutta percha and Chatterton's compound, the whole insulating material to be wound round with broad tape or webbing, strongly bound on. Outside this again comes a "serving" of tarred hemp, and then the protecting sheath or iron covering of twelve large galvanised iron wires, to be wound on spirally. With ordinary cables the protecting covering would stop at the outer iron wires, but in this instance, as the line is to be laid in comparatively shallow water, the wires themselves, though galvanised, are to be still further protected from their most formidable enemy—rust. This is done most effectually by coating the whole cable thickly with two servings of tarred hemp yarn, overlaid with two coatings of a patent composition invented by Sir Charles Bright and Mr. Latimer Clark. The composition consists of mineral pitch or asphalt, Stockholm tar, and powdered silica, mixed in certain proportions and laid on hot. When quite cold this forms a massive covering of great strength and perfect flexibility, totally impervious to water, and incapable of being destroyed by the minute animalculæ which exists in such abundance in tropical waters. The weight of these main sections of the cable is about three tons per mile, but the extreme shore ends will be very massive, coated with galvanised iron wire of almost tenfold strength, and weighing as much as fifteen tons a mile. In certain portions of the route near Bussorah, where there is any danger to be apprehended from small coasters anchoring, the weight of the line will also be increased by the extra thickness of its wires to nine tons a mile—enough to shield it from any risk from anchors there. The contract for the manufacture of this cable has been given to Mr. Henley, of North Woolwich, who has undertaken to make it at the rate of not less than fifty nautical miles per week, and who, from the extent of his works, will probably be able to turn it out even faster. At every stage of its manufacture the electrical staff of Messrs. Bright are to test it for insulation and conductivity, and the standard below which it is not to be allowed to fall in either of these respects is fixed nearly at 25 per cent. higher in proportion than almost any cable has ever yet attained. In short, as far as depends on minute care and a wide scientific experience, the whole cable is likely to be as perfect as skill or ingenuity can make it. The vessels which are to take this line will probably leave England about the end of next June, arriving on the scene of their operations in the Persian Gulf in November or December—the best time of the year in which to lay the cable. The process of submerging it and securing the shore ends is not likely to occupy at the most more than three weeks. The total cost of the submarine sections of the line will be less than £300,000, including the expenses of laying it.—Times.

AN INDIAN OFFICER CONVICTED OF SWINDLING.

At the Birmingham borough sessions on Wednesday, before Mr. J. Spooner, deputy Recorder, Francis Packe, a lieutenant in the East Indian army, surrendered on bail to take his trial on a charge of obtaining from John Brown, by means of false pretences, on the 7th of November last, a suit of clothes and the sum of £2. 10s. 6d. in money. The prisoner, who is a young man of respectable appearance, is the son of a clergyman, residing at the Cloisters, Windsor. Mr. Saint appeared for the prosecution, and the Hon. E. C. Leigh for the defence.

The evidence, which was given at considerable length, went to show that the prisoner, who is a lieutenant in the Bengal army, came to this country on furlough in September, 1861, and that on his arrival he executed a power of attorney, appointing Messrs. Grindlay and Co., Indian army agents, London, his agents, to receive his pay and allowances during the time he was in England on furlough. The furlough expired in the beginning of August last, and at the end of July Messrs. Grindlay had, in accordance with the instructions of prisoner, received from the treasurer of the India Board his passage money and six months' pay in advance. On the 5th of August they received a letter from the prisoner, ordering them to pay the amount due to him to a Mr. Gardener, and on the 9th August they paid to Mr. Gardener £116. 6s. 11d., the balance in their hands in favour of Lieut. Packe. This closed his account, and after the 9th of August Messrs. Grindlay did not receive a shilling on account of Lieut. Packe. In the beginning of November the prisoner was staying at the Hen and Chickens hotel, Birmingham. On the 3rd he went to the shop of Mr. Boucher, draper, New-street, and was measured for a suit of clothes; and on the Friday morning following went and asked that they might be sent to his hotel that evening. Later in the day he again went to the shop, and on being told that the clothes were ready, he tendered to Brown, shopman of Mr. Boucher, a cheque drawn upon Messrs. Grindlay for £10 in payment, and received £2. 10s. oct. He then went out, and meeting a porter carrying the clothes to the hotel, ordered him to take them direct to the railway station. As some suspicion had, however, been excited with regard to some other cheques on Messrs. Grindlay paid by the prisoner at the hotel, he was stopped as he was getting into the train for Bristol, and detained until the next morning, when Brown, who had sent up the cheques to London to be presented, received a telegram saying it was a dead swindle. Brown at once gave prisoner into custody on a charge of obtaining money under false pretences. One of the clerks of Messrs. Grindlay and Co. stated that after the prisoner's account was closed at least twenty cheques bearing his signature had been presented to the firm and dishonoured; and Mr. Smith, landlord of the Hen and Chickens Hotel, produced five more in court.

The jury found the prisoner "Guilty."

The learned Recorder said that it was rarely a case so clear as this one was. He could not but believe that a vast number of people had been defrauded. He commiserated the relatives of the prisoner, but it was his duty to impose a heavy sentence upon him, and that sentence was that he be imprisoned and kept to hard labour for eighteen months.

The prisoner is "wanted" for similar offences in Manchester, Sheffield, and Liverpool.

SIR R. ALCOCK ON JAPAN.

At the second general meeting of the members of the Leeds Philosophical and Literary Society, held on Tuesday night, a lecture on Japan was delivered by Sir R. Alcock, K.C.B., her Majesty's Consul to that empire. Mr. T. P. Teale, the president of the society, was in the chair, and there was a large and fashionable audience. Sir Rutherford having given a brief geographical description of the Japanese empire and of its discovery and its resources, said that while the Europeans desired commercial intercourse the people of Japan desired nothing so much as to be let alone. The Government of Japan had come of late years to the conclusion that the time had arrived when it could no longer carry out its traditional policy, or, at all events, it felt that if it did attempt it there would be a force and power brought to bear upon it much too strong to resist. A large portion of the ruling classes in Japan had never reconciled themselves to this change, and whether the struggle of civilisation with opposing principles would end during this generation was a very serious question. The decree had gone forth that this isolation should not be, and it was for them to endeavour to ascertain the facts which would enable them to arrive at a conclusion as to what were the future destinies of Japan and the prospects of foreign trade and commerce with the people. Sir Rutherford said that the events which followed the first introduction of Europeans—Portuguese and Spaniards—in the sixteenth or seventeenth century, the readiness and hospitality with which they were received, the introduction of Christianity, the erection of churches, schools, monasteries, &c., was followed, however, by the utter expulsion of foreigners, from the fear that they would subvert the power of the Sovereigns of the empire. Now that foreigners were again admitted they must hope it would be with better result—that, warned by the past, they would avoid its errors, and seek through commerce and civilisation to bring good and not evil. The similarity of the geographical distribution of the Japanese empire and the British Islands suggested a striking view of similarity and of contrast in the development of the industrial arts and manufactures of the two peoples. In pure workmanship, in beauty of design, in command over the powers of nature, and in many other respects, the Japanese were able to rival the best productions of Europe, and yet, side by side with this, they had a feudalism exactly corresponding with that of our Anglo-Saxon and early Norman forefathers. Having entered at some length into a comparison of the points in which the Japanese resembled the Anglo-Saxons, he gave an amusing description of the dual character of the Government and the empire. There were two Sovereigns, one to look after the temporal affairs and the other after affairs spiritual; two Foreign Ministers, two Councils of State; and, indeed, every man had his shadow, producing a most complex Administration, which it was surprising could be made to work. The Japanese were not intolerant or bigoted on religious subjects; indeed, they cared too little upon the subject to trouble themselves about it. He could not say much for their veracity, for the last thing hoped to hear from them was the truth. He believed there was very little corruption among the judges, and, what was most extraordinary, there were no lawyers. He could not say much for the temperance of the Japanese; they were very quarrelsome over their cups, and as they always wore swords (which had the reputation of being equal to Damascus blades), and as life was regarded as of little value, frequent fatal encounters occurred. The Japanese boasted of their valour, and death was always accepted in preference to disgrace. If a noble were convicted of any offence, his property was confiscated and his family degraded; and, therefore, to avoid this, a man charged with crime assembled his friends, and in their presence made away with himself. Turning to the progress of civilisation, tested by the industrial arts, he observed that, notwithstanding the existence of feudalism, the people had advanced in material civilisation to an extent scarcely inferior to our own. In the applied sciences, in steam machinery, &c., they were far behind Europeans; but some of the results of skilled labour, in silk and textile fabrics, in lacquer, metals, porcelain, &c., would bear comparison with those of any other nation. Sir Rutherford exhibited a large variety of specimens of Japanese art, illustrating the ingenuity, the graceful design, and the marvellous workmanship expended in their production. The Japanese were thus able to supply all their wants, and though this was highly honourable to them it was little favourable to foreign commerce. It was the upper class, the nobles, who were most hostile to trade and foreign intercourse; they remembered the designs of the first foreigners admitted into the empire, and they regarded the introduction of commerce as being the precursor of social disorder and revolution, and as certain to lead to their impoverishment. As to the chances of admission for English cottons, woollens, &c., he said that, the Japanese having been self-satisfied for many years, it was clear they must wait until there had been time to create new wants. At present any wants Europeans could supply they (the Japanese) could supply better and cheaper. We must wait until new wants were created. It was possible, with time and patience, and if the necessary force were maintained, that the opposition to foreign intercourse would greatly diminish, and even finally disappear; but it was impossible to conceal that life was insecure, and at any moment the people might determine to risk everything upon the hazard of war with foreign Powers rather than allow them to establish friendly and peaceful relations. They could only hope for the best, and resort to no means which would bring about any such calamity as he had referred to if they could avoid it. The dress of the upper class was principally silk, and that of the lower classes entirely cotton. As Japan was a cotton-growing country, and labour was cheap, it would be difficult for English merchants to compete with the natives, except in the finer class of goods. Nothing would take in Japan that was not cheap, but in the northern parts, where the winters were of Siberian severity, woollen and mixed goods would be very suitable and acceptable. A factory for the construction of machines had been established at Nagasaki, and the Government had purchased six or seven steam-vessels at extortionate prices; but the Japanese were not yet sufficiently advanced to possess steam-engines on railways. The opposition to foreign commerce he believed to be entirely confined to the governing classes. With reference to the important subject introduced by Mr. Baines, he hoped he was not understood as giving any decided opinion as to whether it was or was not justifiable that Europeans should force themselves upon other nations. He simply wished to show the position in which they stood. They had forced themselves upon the Japanese; they had begun by force, and if they wished for commerce they must establish it by force. If they did not wish for commerce at that price, then they should be consistent, and withdraw from the Japanese empire. A vote of thanks was then passed by acclamation, and the audience separated after inspecting the beautiful objects of Japanese art exhibited by Sir Rutherford.

MISCELLANEOUS.

APPOINTMENTS.—(Foreign-office, Dec. 14.)—The Queen has been graciously pleased to appoint Francis Howard Vyse, Esq., now her Majesty's Consul at Kanagawa, to be her Majesty's Consul at Hakodadi. The Queen has also been pleased to appoint Charles Alexander Winchester, Esq., now her Majesty's Consul at Hakodadi, to be her Majesty's Consul at Kanagawa. (Dec. 20.)—The Queen has been pleased to approve of Mr. James Bullock as Consul at Akyab for his Majesty the King of the Belgians. The Queen has also been pleased to approve of Mr. E. Oesterley as Consul at Calcutta for his Royal Highness the Grand Duke of Oldenburg.

SPECIE TO THE EAST.—We learn from Mr. James Low's "Annual Statement" that no less than £3,115,162 in gold and £13,792,253 in silver were exported from Europe to the East during the year 1862. Of these large sums, £1,631,733 in gold and £9,864,056 were sent direct from Southampton by the P. and O. Company's steamers, the balance being shipped from the Mediterranean ports. In the course of the last twelve years the drain upon Great Britain amounts to £9,742,412 in gold and £91,864,180 in silver, in addition to £3,925,614 in gold and £20,556,024 in silver from the different ports in the Mediterranean. During the year that has just closed £619,831 in gold and £7,810,307 in silver were consigned to Bombay; £274,650 in gold and £585,335 in silver to Madras; £10,959 in gold and £1,857,255 in silver to Calcutta; £10,610 in gold and £1,456,141 in silver to Hong Kong; and £180 in gold, and £1,175,142 in silver to Shanghai.

FATAL ACCIDENT AT CHELTENHAM.—We learn with great regret that a serious accident which befel Mr. Stuart Thompson, when hunting, at Cheltenham, the week before last, has terminated fatally. The last day Mr. Thompson was out with the hounds he was thrown from his horse with great force against a stone wall, by which his head was most severely injured, and he was deprived of consciousness. The injury received was too serious for remedy, and death followed on the 26th ult. The deceased young gentleman was in the Indian Civil Service, and was at home on leave. He was a most popular member of the Killultagh hunt, every member of which will sincerely deplore his untimely loss.—Northern Whig.

MILITARY AND NAVAL EDUCATION.—

A MARRIED CLERGYMAN, resident at Brighton, RECEIVES a limited number of PUPILS, between the ages of Twelve and Fifteen, who may be destined for the Military and Naval Professions. With a view to this ultimate object, the entire course of Study, from the outset, is regulated expressly in conformity with the requirements of the Examinations at Addiscombe, Sandhurst, Woolwich, and Portsmouth; and every care is taken to direct special attention to those subjects likely to prove professionally useful in the future career of the Naval or Military officer. The Pupils are examined periodically in Mathematics by Professor J. R. Young, formerly of Belfast College, and Author of "A Course of Mathematics, Pure and Mixed, for the Use of Candidates for the Military and Civil Service Examinations," &c.; and also in Classics and Modern Languages by Scholars of repute. Prospectuses may be had of Messrs. ALLEN and Co., 13, Waterloo-place, London, S.W.

HINDOOSTANI AND PERSIAN.

LESSONS in the above LANGUAGES are given by an INDIAN GENTLEMAN of Twenty Years' Experience as Professor, Interpreter, and Translator; who has obtained Certificates of degrees of honour and high proficiency from the Examiners of the College of Fort William. He possesses the most satisfactory testimonials, and can give unexceptionable references.

Address, "ALLY," care of Messrs. ALLEN and Co., 13, Waterloo-place, S.W.

MESSRS. WM. H. ALLEN AND CO.'S PUBLICATIONS.

AN INQUIRY into the THEORIES of HISTORY.—CHANCE, LAW, WILL, with Special References to the Principles of the Positive Philosophy. 8vo cloth, 15s.

"This is both an able and an interesting book; for the writer, while an accurate and in some respects an original thinker, has also the command of a clear and animated style. The general scope of the book is the refutation of that naked positivism of which M. Comte is the apostle. . . . Of the whole work we can confidently say that it is one to be read by every man interested in these questions. It is a weighty treatise, and an important contribution to philosophy."—The Press, August 16, 1862.

"Written to combat certain opinions which have lately been gaining ground with some classes of thinkers, this treatise is well-timed. With no more boldness than is proper, the author claims that the views of wise men in former ages shall not be disregarded without good reason, and that nothing new and improved shall be accepted simply because of its impudence. His own language throughout is moderate and logical. A Conservative on principle, it is a part of his conservative belief in the steady progress of mankind to seek for the development of new thoughts in every age of human history, and ready to accept all that bears the stamp of truth. In a book full of argument, and occupying just that border-land of metaphysics which is harder to tread than the defined circle of metaphysics itself, it would be easy to discover discrepancies of thought and contradictions of terms; but the faults are few, and the merits many."—Examiner, Aug. 16, 1862.

A SHORT TRIP IN HUNGARY and TRANSYLVANIA in the SPRING of 1862. By PROFESSOR D. T. ANSTED. Post 8vo., cloth, 8s. 6d.

"Professor Ansted's descriptions are written with a neatness attesting the accuracy of a scientific observer's eyes. His volume is one both of value and entertainment: a book calculated to turn the thoughts of tourists down the Danube."—Athenæum, Aug. 16, 1862.

"Many a tourist this autumn will have cause to thank Professor Ansted for introducing them to a new and comparatively unknown country. . . . It would be difficult to find a more agreeable companion for a tour than the author of this interesting volume."—The Press, Aug. 9, 1862.

THE SCIENCE of HOME LIFE.

By ALBERT J. BERNAYS, Professor of Chemistry and Natural Philosophy, and of Practical Chemistry at St. Thomas's Hospital Medical and Surgical College (late Lecturer on Chemistry and Practical Chemistry at St. Mary's Hospital), &c., &c. Illustrated by several cuts. Post 8vo., cloth, 6s.

MEMORABLE EVENTS of MODERN HISTORY. By J. G. EDGAR. Author of the "Boyhood of Great Men," &c., &c. With Illustrations. Post 8vo., cloth, 6s. 6d.

"A practical writer, with a high sense of his obligations as an instructor of children, Mr. J. G. Edgar never makes a contribution to juvenile literature that does not deserve a certain measure of commendation. We can conscientiously recommend it ('Memorable Events') as a work at the same time entertaining and useful."—Athenæum, March 6, 1862.

"Mr. Edgar's style is clear, vigorous, simple, and unaffected, and from the first page to the last the reader is instinctively conscious of standing in the presence of a gentleman and a scholar. Though writing for the benefit of the rising generation Mr. Edgar possesses the enviable talent of attracting at the same time the attention of young men and grey-heads, and of so describing events as to suggest many a topic for grave reflection. His last ('Memorable Events') is certainly not his least work, and not only confirms but enhances his previous reputation as an earnest, agreeable, high-minded, and reliable chronicler of human achievements and human follies and failures."—Spectator.

"A most acceptable present for the youth of both sexes."—Observer.

THE FORESTS and GARDENS of SOUTH INDIA. By HUGH CREAGHORN, M.D., F.L.S., Conservator of Forests, Madras Presidency. Post 8vo., with Illustrations, price 12s.

"Full of valuable information and thoroughly reliable on all its statements."—Daily News.

THE HISTORY of CHESS: from the Time of the Early Invention of the Game in India till the Period of its Establishment in Western and Central Europe. By DUNCAN FORBES, LL.D., 8vo., cloth, 15s.

"This volume will be a welcome addition to the library of every lover of the noble game of chess. Our author makes a stout fight for the Hindus as the inventors of the game, and adduces many cogent proofs in support of his opinion. He shows how the game is played in other countries, how it has been modified both in the names of the pieces and the names of the game by the peculiarities of the country or the national temperament of the inhabitants; and then traces the steps by which it has arrived at its present place of honour in civilized and intellectual Europe. The book is, therefore, full of curious lore that lean on other and higher subjects than chess-playing, for it involves dissertations on ethnology, comparative ethnology, the dispersion and settlement of nations, and the manners and customs of different countries, to a degree that would not be at all anticipated by a person who contented himself by reading the title-page. All this information is given, not in any dry, repulsive, or even technical style, but easily, clearly, and in an animated manner—the style that would naturally be adopted by a gentleman and man of the world."—Herald.

SIN: its Causes and Consequences. An Attempt to Investigate the Origin, Nature, Extent, and Results of Moral Evil. A Series of Lent Lectures. By the Rev. HENRY CHRISTMAS, M.A., F.R.S. Post 8vo., cloth, 6s. 6d.

"These lectures are learned, eloquent, and earnest, and though they approach the 'limits of religious thought,' they do not transgress those limits; and they present the reader with a comprehensive review, based upon revelation, of the nature, extent, and consequences of moral evil or sin, both in this world and in the world to come."—Civil Service Gazette.

A COURSE of ELEMENTARY MATHEMATICS, for the Use of Candidates for Admission into either of the Military Colleges; of Applicants for Appointments in the Home or Indian Civil Service; and of Mathematical Students generally. 2nd Edition. In one closely printed 8vo. volume. Pp. 644. Price 12s.

"In the work before us he has digested a complete Elementary Course by aid of his long experience as a teacher and a writer; and he has produced a very useful book. . . . Mr. Young has not allowed his own tastes to rule the distribution, but has adjusted his parts with the skill of a veteran."—Athenæum, March 9, 1861.

"Mr. Young is well-known as the author of undoubtedly the best treatise on the 'Theory of Equations' which is to be found in our language—a treatise distinguished by originality of thought, great learning, and admirable perspicuity. Nor are these qualities wanting in the work which we are reviewing. . . . Considering the difficulty of the task which Mr. Young has undertaken to discharge, and the extent of useful knowledge he has succeeded in imparting accurately and lucidly in so small a compass, we can without hesitation commend this work to the public as by far the best elementary course of mathematics in our language."—The London Review, April 6, 1861.

THE RUSSIANS AT HOME: Unpolitical

Sketches, showing what Newspapers they read; what Theatres they frequent; and how they Eat, Drink, and Enjoy themselves; with other matter relating chiefly to Literature, Music, and to Places of Historical and Religious Interest in and about Moscow. By SUTHERLAND EDWARDS, Esq. 2nd Edition, with Illustrations. Price 10s. 6d.

"It is a book that we can sincerely recommend, not only to those who are desirous of abundant and reliable information respecting the social economy of the Russian people, but to those who seek an entertaining volume, that may be perused in any part with both profit and amusement."—Edinburgh Evening Courant.

"This is not only one of the most amusing books that we have read for a long time, but also the best and most reliable account of Russian life and manners which has hitherto been given to the public."—Spectator.

"The tone is so genial, the descriptions are so vigorously touched, and the author's perfect acquaintance with his subject is so marked throughout, that his sketches are sure to delight any one into whose hands they may fall."—Literary Gazette.

THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY of MISS COR-

NELIA KNIGHT, Lady Companion to the Princess Charlotte of Wales, with Extracts from her Journals and Anecdote Books. Fourth Edition, 2 vols., 8vo., cloth, £1. 6s.

"Why we should turn to these volumes as among the most interesting of the recent season, will be sufficiently evident as we indicate their contents."—Times.

"Of the popularity of these volumes, on account of their historical as well as gossiping merits, there can be no doubt whatever."—Athenæum.

THE HISTORY of the OPERA, from

MONTEBERDE to DONIZETTI. By SUTHERLAND EDWARDS. Second Edition, 2 vols., 8vo., cloth, price £1. 1s.

"Completely master of his subject, and possessing a ready and pleasing pen, Mr. Edwards in these volumes gives us an exceedingly interesting history of operatic performances."—Herald.

"It is one of those treasures of amusing anecdote that may be taken up and laid down at a minute's notice."—Times.

THE REPUBLIC of FOOLS: being the History of the State and People of Abdera in Thrace. Translated from the German of C. M. von Wieland. By the Rev. H. CHRISTMAS. 2 vols., post 8vo., cloth, 18s.

"As a prose satire, 'The History of the Abderites' yields only in breadth of humor, and pungency of wit, to Dean Swift's immortal travels of Captain Lemuel Gulliver: and of works of that class we know of none in any language that can compare with either of the two."—Observer.

"Here is enjoyment for many a Christmas to come, for many thousands of English boys, and many thousands of English men and women. Unfortunately for the world Pisistratus Caxton departed this life without having made any contribution towards the great history of human folly, save, indeed, by the records of his own. Mr. Christmas has given us something even better in his translation of 'Wieland's Abderites': and in the simplest, most racy, and vernacular English, has enriched our literature with another character of the family dear to mankind, of the Quixotes, Gullivers, and other human foils of human self-love and vanity. If the addition to our shelves of a book to delight the young and instruct the old overflowing with wit, fun, drollery, inexpressible wisdom, depth, and knowledge is an achievement deserving of national thanks, we undertake to convey our share to Mr. Christmas, fearing only lest we should not have thanked him sufficiently."—London Review.

FIRE! THIEVES! FIRE!!!

C. H. GRIFFITHS having purchased nearly all the best quality of Fire-proof Safes from the International Exhibition of 1862, including those made by Messrs. Perry, Chatwood, Rhodes, and other eminent makers, is enabled to offer them at half the original cost. The patented improvements of the latter maker render it an impossibility for fire to take any effect under any circumstances of time and place. In consequence of the increasing demand for business, or, indeed, private repositories, which no house of business, or, indeed, private house (where plate, books, and documents are kept) should be without, in these hazardous and dangerous times, C. H. G. has taken additional premises, 3, Pentonville-road, opposite the Angel, Islington, where he also intends to keep a variety of Second-hand Safes by those eminent large makers, Milner, Price, Mordan, &c., at half the price of new. Sketches, with prices, free by post. Old-change, St. Paul's, London; and opposite the Angel, Islington.

CHILDREN'S WORM TABLETS

(KEATING'S).—The recently discovered unfailing remedy for Worm disorders in Children and Adults has now been concentrated in the form of a purely Vegetable Sweet-meat. The Tablet is eagerly taken by children, and one or three given once or twice a week will effect a safe and certain cure.

Sold retail by all Druggists and Patent Medicine Vendors in the World.

PRITCHARD'S DANDELION, CAMO-

MILE, RHUBARB, and GINGER PILLS.—This peculiar preparation of Dandelion acts particularly on the liver, thus avoiding the use of mercurials, and will be found invaluable to parties suffering from a sluggish state of that organ, or who have resided in India or other hot climates; whilst the well known stomachic efficacy of camomile, rhubarb, and ginger, renders these pills the most happy combination possible; and as many are at a loss for a safe remedy they will find this medicine a great convenience, which may be resorted to by all persons at any age, under any circumstances, and without the least inconvenience. Prepared by W. Pritchard, Apothecary, 65, Charing-cross, London, in bottles, 1s. 1gd., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. May be had of all Medicine Vendors.

DINNEFORD'S PURE FLUID MAGNE-

SIA has been, during twenty-five years, emphatically sanctioned by the Medical Profession, and universally accepted by the Public, as the Best Remedy for Acidity of the Stomach, Heartburn, Headache, Gout, and Indigestion, and as a Mild Aperient for delicate constitutions, more especially for Ladies and Children. When combined with the Acidulated Lemon Syrup, it forms an agreeable Effervescent Draught, in which its Aperient qualities are much increased. During Hot Seasons, and above all, in Hot Climates, the regular use of this simple and elegant remedy has been found highly beneficial. It is prepared (in a state of perfect purity and of uniform strength) by DINNEFORD and Co., 173, New Bond-street, London; and sold by all respectable Chemists throughout the World.

KEATING'S PERSIAN INSECT POWDER.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—GLOWING

HEALTH.—The most formidable assailants of health are ever haunting humanity during winter, and can only be outwitted by keeping the blood pure and every organ up to its work. Holloway's Pills accomplish this with unerring certainty. Biliousness, loss of appetite, sick headache, and all ailments of spirits, are all removed by a course of this admirable medicine, whose balsamic and healing virtues fortify the system, and may therefore be advantageously taken by the young, debilitated, and aged. These Pills strengthen the stomach and brace the nerves. They may always be relied on as gentle laxatives or stronger purgatives when the dose is regulated by attention to the directions enveloping each box, and which are intelligible to every one.

The Illustrations drawn on Wood expressly for the Work, by PAUL J. NAFFEL, Member of the London Society of Painters in Water Colours.

"The 'Channel Islands' is an excellent book of its class—well conceived, well written, well illustrated, well printed. It is the produce of many hands, and every hand a good one. Nearly every thing which a man can desire to know about Jersey, Guernsey, Alderney, and Sark—about their history, Geography, and natural history—Professor Ansted and Dr. Latham have contrived to tell. Altogether the contents of the volume are as varied and interesting as a well-sustained drama; and to this drama no more graceful and picturesque scenery could have been furnished than we find in the illustrations so profusely given by artists worthy of the subject and equal to their worth—Paul Naffel and M. Petere Le Lièvre. The result is not a merely handsome volume of the old 'Keepsake' style, made to sell and be looked at, but a book of rare merit and value, made for instruction and delight, to be read with pleasure and to be referred to with profit."—Athenaeum, Nov. 15, 1862.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA
IN COUNCIL HEREBY GIVES NOTICE, That he has received from the Government at Bombay the under-mentioned SCHEDULES, viz.:

Schedule of all Sums of Money, Bonds, and other Securities received by the Administrator-general on account of each Estate remaining under his charge, together with the payments made thereout, and the Balances. Prepared up to the 30th June, 1862, under Section XXXIV. of Act No. VIII. of 1855: and,

Schedule of all Administrations whereof the final Balances have been paid to the persons entitled to the same, specifying the amount of such Balances and the persons to whom paid. Prepared from 31st December, 1861, to 30th June, 1862, under Section XXXIV. of Act No. VIII. of 1855:

And that the said Schedules are open to the inspection of the public in the Department of the Official Agent to the Administrators-general of India, at this Office.

INDIAN TRAMWAY COMPANY (LIMITED).

At a SPECIAL MEETING of the INDIAN TRAMWAY COMPANY (Limited), held at the LONDON TAVERN, Bishopsgate-street, on TUESDAY, 30th December, 1862, the following RESOLUTIONS were unanimously passed:—

Resolved—That the Shareholders approve the course suggested of undertaking the contract for the road from Paley to Jambosseer, being a short line, capable of easy and early construction, at a fixed contract cost, and forming an important link between the cotton districts and the Trunk Line to Bombay, on the understanding that the Board will not enter upon the execution of any more lines until the Government of India shall have conceded such terms as in the judgment of a Special General Meeting, to be convened for the purpose, shall be considered satisfactory.

Resolved—That this Meeting desire to impress upon the Governments the policy of encouraging, by every means in their power, the construction of Light Railways or Tramways throughout India in connection with the Trunk Line of Railways now approaching completion, with a view as well to the earliest development of the resources of India in connection with these Railways as to rendering productive at as early a period as possible the capital embarked in them.

They desire also to express their opinion that the terms hitherto offered do not hold forth sufficient advantages to attract capital on a scale commensurate with the object.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THIS mail brings us no very startling intelligence; but the greater portion of the matter is far from uninteresting. It appears that Lord Elgin, of whose return to Europe on account of ill-health there had been many rumours for some two or three months, has quite recovered from the ill-health which he had experienced towards the close of the last rains.

Lady Elgin was expected to arrive in H.M.'s steamer Feroze about the middle of January, when the Governor-general's camp would proceed en route for Simla, the favourite sanatorium of Anglo-Indian potentates. In that bracing climate the Viceroy will probably have his health confirmed, and he will be prepared once more to brave the "hot vapour bath" of Bengal. Lord Elgin seems already to have earned golden opinions from all sorts of people in British India, so that the rumour of his return to England excited a feeling of universal regret.

His Excellency Sir Hugh Rose, it was expected, would be recalled; but for this supposition there is, apparently, no real foundation. It would be hard upon one who has served his country so well in the field, and who has won such brilliant laurels, to be disgraced and humiliated by the deprivation of his important post, only on account of a little indiscretion and an effusion of bad temper, which it is hoped may be forgotten or forgiven, in consideration of his many better qualities. No doubt in the Priestley Scandal affair he acted very blameably, and the local press told him pretty plainly of his misconduct; and, in spite of his influential position, one so used to applause must have felt very keenly his temporary unpopularity. Then he was unsupported in his proceedings, or rather positively checked by the Governor-general, so that he has, perhaps, altogether been sufficiently punished for his imprudence and bad taste, and his worst enemies may begin to withdraw their active hostility and abate their ill-will.

The appointment of Sir Charles Trevelyan, as Indian Finance Minister, is still spoken of with the warmest approval. The fact is, that though Sir Charles is supposed to be sometimes a little flighty, crotchety, and eccentric, and even wilful, every one knows that he is a most able, energetic, zealous, and honest public officer, and that he has studied all important Indian questions most industriously and conscientiously. His labours are always labours of love. He puts his whole heart and soul into his work. At one time he took such deep interest in the cause of native education that we indulged in the hope he would be called upon to preside over the whole system of State education in India, and we were not at all aware that he was particularly at home in matters of finance; but men of his talent, earnestness, and energy soon qualify themselves for almost any public post, let the nature of it be what it may.

A great deal of public indignation has been exhibited towards Mr. Drummond, the Session Judge of Shahjehanpore, for his too gentle treatment of a low native who had spat in the face of an English soldier. The wonder is, that an English soldier under so grievous an insult, instead of taking the law into his own hands, should have patiently submitted the matter to a court of justice. But this brave countryman of ours, who probably with a single back-handed blow could have cast his insulter to the earth, with a respect for the laws which cannot be too highly commended, suppressed his first natural impulse of passion, and submitted his case to an English judge. His orderly conduct, however, was ill-appreciated, and, so far from receiving any redress, the offender was at once pardoned. The Government is well enough disposed to protect the natives as far as justice will permit, but this was carrying a good principle to a most absurd and injurious extreme, and turning kindness to one party into the height of injustice to another. We are glad to hear that Mr. Drummond received a severe reprimand from the Sudder Board.

There has happened since this another case of a native daring to insult a European soldier, and there has been another noble instance of self-control and a respect for the laws on the part of one of our countrymen. This occurred at Madras. The native, driving through the town, drove his carriage over the foot of the soldier, and afterwards struck him across the face with a whip. The soldier quietly gave the fellow in charge. The magistrate fined him a hundred rupees for the assault.

Calcutta was once famous for its theatricals. The little Chowringhee Drury, where H. H. Wilson, Henry Meredith Parker, Major Sewell, W. Palmer, James Hume, and many others once earned such brilliant histrionic laurels, was turned a few years ago into a Roman Catholic school. A new theatre was being erected, and perhaps by this is completed. Shirley Brooks, who was once the London correspondent of the Calcutta Englishman, and who has written so many prologues and opening addresses for English theatres, has written one for the new Temple of Thespis on oriental ground. The theatre is to be under the patronage of the Governor-general.

We call the attention of our military readers to a copy of the Royal Warrant dated 21st of June last, sent by Sir Charles Wood to the Governor-General of India, on the subject of promotions to be made in regiments of the line in all cases of a regimental major being appointed to the staff. The second paragraph of the warrant, which provides for the promotion to brevet rank of lieutenant-colonel of substantive majors, after the completion of their service on the staff, applies also to officers of her Majesty's Indian Forces.

In another column we have given a general order, directing that the present existing vacancies in the grade of cornet and ensign, in the new line regiments of cavalry and infantry, are to be filled, as far as practicable, from the volunteers, from among the cornets and ensigns on the general list of the three presidencies.

We observe the following movements have been ordered in the artillery: No. 2 Battery, 13th Brigade, from Secunderabad to Masulipatam; A Battery, 14th Brigade, from Madras to Bangalore; B Battery, 14th Brigade, from Masulipatam to Secunderabad.

Telegrams received in Paris from Constantinople, dated the 12th inst. (evening), state that the report of Dost Mahommed having captured Herat was unfounded, as information received from Teheran, dated the 11th ult., declares that Herat still holds out.

SERIOUS DISTURBANCE IN NOWGONG, ASSAM.

A very serious disturbance, unfortunately attended with loss of life, occurred in Nowgong on the morning of the 20th November. On the previous day the Deputy-Commissioner, W. H. Brownlow, Esq., received information that an armed party were carrying off women, burning down houses, and murdering people in an adjoining village. He immediately sent a police force, who returned bringing in one poor man fearfully wounded with a battle-axe, and reported that they could not seize the party, who were five in number, fully armed with "tulwars," battle-axes, and Ghorkha knives, and were determined to fight to the last. They had carried off two girls, burned two houses, cut down one man, and attempted the lives of many others. They were headed by a Fakir, who persuaded his companions that he was a god and that they were invulnerable. The whole party had gone into the station, and were shut up in a house close to the bazaar, ready to fight the authorities.

The magistrate immediately went to the house, accompanied by the officer commanding the detachment, Lieutenant Wheeler; the Superintendent of Police, Mr. O'Connor; Assistant-surgeon John G. French; Mr. John Phillips, a tea planter, and ten sepoy with loaded muskets, fully determined to disarm the miscreants by force should they refuse to surrender. The house was within ten yards of the road in the midst of the jungle, having in front of it a small yard and bamboo wall, and on either side two sheds. The magistrate and his party marched into the yard and summoned those inside to come out. The men inside roared out that they would not appear. The order was then given to surround the house with the sepoy, and preparations were made to burn it, a few men with the commanding officer, the magistrate, Assistant-surgeon, and Superintendent of Police remaining opposite the front door. Three men and a woman then came out, all armed, with their clothes tucked up, and arranged themselves in line in the verandah. The magistrate ordered them to lay down their weapons, but they refused, and when again ordered they furiously sprang forward. One man armed with a battle-axe, which he wielded right and left with both hands, attacked the magistrate, who kept him off with a small parade sword, and cut him fearfully, but a sepoy shot and bayoneted the scoundrel. The second man, armed with a large "Kookaree," also fought furiously and was shot. The third man, armed with a large "tulwar" and shield, sprang at the assistant surgeon and tried to cut him down, but the blow was parried by a small parade sword, and a return cut was received by his antagonist on his shield cutting deep into it and also into the left arm; then, before he had time to give another blow, a sword cut on the head and a bayonet wound from a sepoy killed him. Thereupon the woman with her tulwar made a cut at Mr. O'Connor, which glanced off his hat. She then escaped into the jungle, where she was found. The house was then searched, spears and other arms were found, and a girl was released. One man escaped from the house, but was captured, and in a short time another was apprehended.

Thus ended a most unfortunate affair—three men were killed in pure self-defence, and the other two and the woman were lodged in gaol. No opportunity of disarming the fanatics who fought was afforded as was originally intended. They seem to have fought and died, sooner than give themselves up to justice. Believing they had committed murder among their many crimes, they knew that the law should take its course, or they believed that they were invulnerable and that nothing could hurt them since their leader was a god. It was clearly proved that their intention on coming into the station was to kill the Europeans and burn it, no doubt relying on the support of the Mussulmans in the place.—Friend of India.

THE CINDERELLA OF THE EMPIRE.

The native history and English administration of Nagpore and the associated Central Provinces have at last found an annalist. Taking full advantage of the report of Sir Richard Jenkins in 1817, Mr. Temple, the present Chief Commissioner, has managed to combine with his record of the ordinary details of administration a clear narrative of the past history of the provinces, and well-outlined pictures of the people, their country and its capabilities, such as are essential in the first account of territories which we have only pretended to govern for the past nine years. It was a strange fatality which made Nagpore the despair of the empire. Lord Dalhousie's well-known instinct for selecting the best agents seemed never less at fault than when he sent as Commissioner one who wanted only conscientiousness to be the ablest man in the service—Mr. G. Plowden; but Nagpore was deservedly his official ruin. Men of determined energy and high honour, like Mr. Ellis and Captain E. Bell, would have saved their superior from the effects of his folly, just as they finally did save the country, and by a disregard of all official etiquette preserve English honour and prestige. But they necessarily, for the moment, became the victims of that routine subordination which they had been forced to violate. To the evil and the good in administration Nagpore had been alike fatal, when no alternative was left Lord Canning but to appoint, as Mr. Plowden's successor, Colonel Elliot, who had been most closely associated with him and knew the delicate details of our relations with the people and the Bhonsla family. But Colonel Elliot was incapable of learning, and under him Nagpore was no better administered than under Mr. Plowden, though he had sufficient intelligence and industry to furnish the Foreign Office with the usual returns, while he still kept Nagpore in its happy obscurity.

The cotton crisis came on, Lord Dalhousie's prediction seven years before was verified, Nagpore with other provinces was made a Chief Commissionership, and Colonel Elliot retired for a time to England. Cotton and the Godavery directed all eyes to the Central Provinces; a commission was sent to report upon their expenditure, a public works inspector followed, the few intelligent residents, both native and European, had courage to speak out, and an amount of careless misgovernment was revealed disgraceful to our name, and still more to the officials who were guilty. The commission was revolutionised, the military clique was broken up, and a clever Punjabee, who had been the right-hand man of Sir John Lawrence in the Punjab, and of Mr. Wilson and Mr. Laing in their financial and economical measures, was appointed to act in Colonel Elliot's absence. Whatever might be Mr. Temple's deficiencies at the head of a long-settled province where cautious judgment and an intimate knowledge of the branches of government are required, all will admit that as a pioneer no man in India is better fitted for his duties. His unflagging energy, his great versatility, his enlightened views and his respect for public opinion, fit him to govern the Central Provinces for the next five years far more successfully than many abler and older men. His report is as well written as it is in his subject novel and attractive. It is free from most of the extravagant and frequently deluding representations of the earlier Punjab reports, and he shows no little skill in effectually conveying an impression of the gross misgovernment of Nagpore without inculpating any of his predecessors. The only fault is one which is too common to Mr. Temple, a hesitation in giving a decided opinion. It is certainly more pleasant to state both sides of a question and so leave the supporters of each in the belief that they are right. Regarding the Godavery, for instance, Mr. Temple becomes almost self-contradictory, and it is only by a careful comparison of paragraphs we learn that his own opinion is more fatal to the utility of a large expenditure on that river than even Colonel Bruce's. Again, his remarks on cotton are singularly vague, for the same reason. It is clear to every reader, from what he says, that the Central Provinces could grow three times the quantity now raised, but for a circumstance which he does not even allude to—the scarcity of labour. Besides this, we know that much less cotton is grown in these territories now than half a century ago. But this vagueness, this hesitation in giving a decision on points of paramount interest, is perhaps natural in one who has been only a few months at the head of the least known territory in India. Otherwise the Report is masterly, and its 138 quarto pages are to the reader as entertaining as a thoughtful traveller's description of a hitherto unvisited country.

Every page affords food for comment or the compilation of novel fact, and we shall hereafter treat of perhaps the most interesting portion, which refers to the peculiar character of the natives, their singular land tenures, and the bearing of the latter on the all-important question of the growth of cotton and the attraction of English capital. The Provinces may be best described as a triangle in the very heart of India, embracing the ancient Gondwana, and stretching at the extreme points for 550 miles from east to west and 510 from north to south. They extend over an area of 170,000 square miles, or nearly three times the size of England. They are shut in on all sides from the sea, and are in the unfortunate position of being traversed by rivers like the Godavery and Nerbudda, which, rising in the low Satpura hills and their branches, are little more than great mountain torrents fed by the periodical rains instead of by perennial snow, as in the case of the Himalayan rivers. If inhabited like England their population would be at least sixty millions, but it is only nine, and this is, to our mind, the most serious drawback to the progress of the country, as it is in Burmah and Assam. The nine millions are governed, like the seven of Oudh, generally on the Punjab system, by a Chief Commissioner, a Judicial Commissioner, four Commissioners of Divisions, and seventeen Deputy Commissioners, besides a subordinate staff of fifteen Assistant and eighteen extra Assistant Commissioners. These nine millions paid last year taxes short of one million sterling, or £823,347. Not a seventh of the country is cultivated, and that is held at the average rate of a shilling an acre, the land-tax yielding a little above half a million. They consumed salt last year which yielded £89,812 to the revenue; they spent a similar sum on intoxicating drugs and liquors, which here as all over India we regret to see complacently styled “a flourishing source of revenue;” they bought £25,719 worth of stamps and paid £42,500 of income-tax. Our exposure of the lazy and oppressive mode of farming out some of these taxes to a rich native banker has led to a cessation of the evil. If we look at Nagpore alone we find that, even after abolishing the barbarous transit duties, we already raise much more revenue than the Mahrattas; while it does not say much for our higher morality that where they received only £15,000 from the excise duties we take £55,900.

The £823,347 raised last year we spent in what seems at first sight a wasteful manner. Twenty-five per cent. of the revenues of Nagpore is devoted to the support of the one family of the Bhonslas. Not less than £100,000 are annually given to some 2,158 pensioners, while we lately conferred on Janojee Rajah the lands of Deor, near Sattara. A burden like this is sufficient to weigh down the most vigorous province, and will long be a mill-stone round its neck. Immediate steps should be taken to capitalise in land all pensions which are for more than three lives. We do not grumble at the expense, which was politically necessary; but what a commentary is this as well as the Bhonsla Fund on the charges brought against Lord Dalhousie of ruthlessly despoiling an ancient family! As to the rest of the expenditure Mr. Temple estimates that, in the current year, £825,000, or 38 per cent. of the revenue, will be spent on civil administration, that is, on officials, courts, police, schools, and dispensaries. The present military expenditure is £380,000, and the whole political pensions are £110,000, leaving only some £10,000 for the all-important necessary public works. But on them £152,767 was spent last year, and much more is being spent now, and must be spent hereafter. If our Cindarella is ever to reach the princely position for which her enormous natural resources destine her, she must have first roads and railways, then, as a partial result of these, labour. Meanwhile she costs the empire at least £200,000 every year, a trifling sum to pay annually for the development of the most hopeful and most neglected of our young provinces, and a sum which might be doubled with future profit to England in cotton, to India in commerce, and to the nine millions of people in prosperity.—Friend of India.

MISCELLANEOUS.

NATIVE INSULT TO A EUROPEAN.—Our readers will recollect the case of Mr. Drummond, the Sessions Judge of Shahjehanpore, releasing on appeal a native who spat in the face of a European soldier. The case was reported in most of the papers at the time, and was reported also to Government, under whose instructions Mr. Drummond has, we are told, and the Allahabad Gazette confirms the rumour, received a reprimand from the Sudder Board. This method of dealing with Mr. Drummond's delinquency amounts to hushing it up, and public justice requires that some public manifestation of the displeasure of Government should be given. The reprimand ought to be published in the Government Gazette. Then, and not till then, will the European soldier and the English non-official believe in the impartial administration of justice. Then, and not till then, will the European soldier and the citizen feel that he lives under the protection of the law. The reprimand sent to Mr. Drummond was probably torn up and thrown into the waste paper basket as soon as read, perhaps before. The main features of the case will be fresh in the recollection of many of our readers. There is one class, and a very large one, who, we may be quite sure, have a very lively recollection of them, and that is the British soldier in this country. To insult and provoke to a breach of the peace, if possible, a low native, without provocation, spits in the face of an English soldier. The latter bears the insult without resenting it, and the offender is pardoned by the judge. The judge, we are told, is reprimanded, but in a private way. Meantime, what is the inference drawn by the countrymen and associates of the two principal parties? Why, in the one case, that the native may spit in the soldier's face with impunity, because the latter dare not resent it. In the other, that for a gross, and intolerable, and unbearable insult there is no redress to be had, and that the law, as administered by some of our present race of judges, is powerless to protect the European, though swift to avenge the native. The story has been read and commented on in every barrack in the country. We advise the Government to give equal publicity to their opinion of Mr. Drummond's conduct in the business.—Delhi Gazette.

THE NEW CALCUTTA THEATRE.—The Hurkaru says:—“The new theatre, situated at the corner of what we believe is to be called Victoria-square, is rapidly progressing towards completion, and will, we learn, be opened on the 1st of December next. The building has only been in existence five months, and the rapidity with which the work has been carried on reflects the highest credit on the indefatigable gentleman superintending it. The building is 147 feet long and 51 feet wide. There is a large vestibule at the entrance, where all crushing will be avoided, and crinoline, in its effects on others and its counter effects upon itself, will have ample room for its sweeping sway. The accommodation inside will also be regulated by the fashion, which at present moulds the form of beauty. The building could contain 800 of an audience, but gauged by the rule of crinoline it is only intended to accommodate 400, a most generous sacrifice of 50 per cent. in favour of the ladies. The stage, which is to be 43 feet deep by 25 broad, will be on a model of the new stages of Drury Lane Theatre and Covent Garden.

The scenery, which is shortly expected from England, has been painted by Beverley, a sufficient guarantee for its excellence and beauty. The first night's performance is to open, we understand, with a prologue, written for the occasion by Shirley Brooks. His Excellency the Governor-general has taken tickets for the season, which promises to be a brilliant one dramatically, and which we hope will also prove to be a brilliant one financially.” The old stock of amateur theatrical celebrities in India has passed away; the late Mr. Hume was about, if not quite, the last of that talented band which once delighted the lovers of histrionics. It is about time the City of Palaces should revive its Thespian fame.

THE LATE CAPTAIN PALMER.—One more of those who may justly claim a place amongst India's Literati has passed from amongst us—one whose family name may carry the reader's thoughts back to the days of Wellesleys and Wellingtons, of Hastings and Bentincks,—in short, to what may be termed “Old India,” ere its Orientalism and its romance, its profusion and its extravagance, had been sobered down by the varied European elements, which are now with rapid strides Anglicising that land. We refer to Capt. Francis Palmer, son of the late John Palmer, the prince of Anglo-Indian merchants, whose marble bust may be seen at the entrance of the Town-hall, and with whose name no old Indian, and very few even of those who may be called “modern,” will be unacquainted. Capt. Palmer, the subject of our notice, first drew breath in the large house in the Lal Bazaar, now known as the police office, but then forming the office and mansion of the chief merchant of this city, where the boy Frank could afterwards recall being kindly noticed by his father's guest, Sir Arthur Wellesley, the future renowned Duke of Wellington.

Captain Palmer's literary labours have been almost exclusively in connection with the local press. Though seldom seen, and probably never named, he has at intervals during the last twenty years of his chequered life been associated editorially with nearly every paper in Calcutta. In the early times of the Englishman with Mr. Stoecqueler; with the Hurkaru under Mr. Samuel Smith; and the Star and Eastern Star with Mr. Hume. If not, as we believe him to have been, the original, he was a very early editor of the Indian Times; and it was, we have understood, under his management that it obtained much reputation as an authority in military matters and intelligence. He was subsequently editor of the Morning Chronicle; and up to the period of his death the Indian Mirror, which came into existence under his management, had nearly all its leading articles from his prolific pen. He was a contributor, also, of several of the most interesting biographical papers in the Indian Review of 1843. . . . Capt. Palmer was at various times also connected with our educational institutions. For some time he was one of the teachers or professors of the Hindoo College. Subsequently to this he was Principal of the Metropolitan College (not principal, but one of the professors. He was principal of Seel's Free College), and we believe that amongst many of the rising generation of the Native youth he will be remembered with affection. Possessing an excellent constitution, which a life of strict temperance—for by choice and general habit he was a water-drinker—had preserved through fifty-eight years of constant residence in India, he retained a degree of vigorous activity, and a boy-like vivacity of spirit, that readily sympathised with the hearts and feelings of youth. In illustration of the degree to which this juvenility, alike of mental and physical power, had been carried into the evening of life, it may not be uninteresting to the advocates of temperance and tea to mention that we have known Capt. Palmer, when past fifty years of age, with one hand only, lift a friend (of no light weight) in his chair, and place him upon the table; and when, ten years afterwards reminded of the feat, he repeated it! He died in the 73rd year of his age.

THE JUDGE OF GORUCKPORE.—A case has come under our notice of so monstrous a charather that we hesitate to believe there is an English judge, even in India, of whom the story is true. The facts demand strict and immediate inquiry on the part of the North-West Government. The judge of Ghazepore, in a civil case brought in appeal before him, suspects a document. Under these circumstances there are by law two courses. One is, under section 171 of the Criminal Procedure Code, to make the case over to the magistrate for inquiry; the other, under section 173, to complete the investigation himself. In either case a complete inquiry, comprising the defence of the prisoner, is indispensable before he is committed to the Sessions Court. With the law staring him in the face, the judge neither remits the case for inquiry to the magistrate nor completes it himself, but at once orders the magistrate to send the case to the sessions—so that, in fact, a commitment to the Sessions Court takes place, without any preliminary trial at all. When the sessions judge gets the case before him he literally sentences the prisoner to ten years' imprisonment, without taking his defence before the Sessions Court at all. Before doing this the prisoner, having remonstrated against the procedure of the judge in refusing to record answers favourable to him, and showing the witness what he (the judge) wished him to record, the judge reviled the prisoner from the bench, calling him "Haramzadah, Badmashsee." The Sudder sends the case back for the prisoner's defence to be taken. The poor wretch, being considerably depressed and bewildered after four months' imprisonment, brings in a written memorandum to refresh his memory, and represents that his mind is not in such a state as to enable him to make a clear defence without referring to this. He begins to give his defence, the Judge flies into a rage, makes his chuprassees write the memorandum, and on the pretext that a prisoner ought not to have time to write, orders an inquiry into the circumstance by the magistrate, and sends the case up again without a defence. There are other facts in the case, but these will be sufficient. The sentence, in a case which at the worst, if proved, possesses no features of aggravation, is scandalously vindictive—ten years' rigorous imprisonment, 2,000 rs. fine, and the confiscation during the whole term of the prisoner's entire property, moveable and immovable, without any provision being made for his children or household. The case has naturally caused a great sensation throughout the district.—Friend of India.

THE NEW RUPEE.—The new rupee has at last been issued, and nothing more ugly and more contemptible has ever been seen in this country. The design is one of which the pettiest zemindar would have been ashamed, as a combination of baldness and tawdriness painful to witness. On the one hand, we do not perceive the slightest emblem of the sovereignty of Great Britain, and the royal arms are altogether wanting. On the other hand, her Majesty is represented, not in her robes of state, but absolutely in Native costume. Such a coinage is not only contemptible but an insult to royalty, and is worse than the most abject submission to Native superstitions in the old days of the Company. Of course, now that her Majesty has been represented as setting the example, our Viceroy will also don the turban, and appear before the people of India as smart as a Bustar zemindar. But our disgust is too deep for words, and for once in our lives we loathe the very sight of a rupee.—Englishman.

NANA SAHIB.—It would appear that the vagabond "Madho Rao," captured the other day while employed in the pleasant task of sowing the seeds of rebellion in Central India, is own brother to the Nana. The Hurkaru says:—"The Times of India publishes a letter from its Sholapore correspondent, which throws considerable light on much that has hitherto appeared mysterious, and on much in which both Government and the public have been profoundly interested. People have always refused to believe the report of the Nana's death. Sir Jung Bahadoor's despatches and those of Major Ramsey gave, as we know, repeated assurances to the Government of the late Viceroy, that the Butcher of Cawnpore had gone to answer for his terrible misdeeds before a higher tribunal than that of his lordship. But society in general refused to yield credence to the tale. Although it was felt that justice had been deprived of a victim more atrocious than any that had appeared before her for a century, yet it was not upon so savage a ground that the report was rejected. Light puffs came playing along and ruffling the surface of society, from time to time, telling a very different story. The belief in the existence of the terrible homicide was not confined to class or creed, and in short the conviction was all but universal, that the Nana was skulking in the jungles of Nepal. And this conviction is now declared to be sound by the delinquent, Madho Rao, whom Capt. Nuthall, Superintendent of Police, lately succeeded in capturing. As brother to the man whose deeds have filled a world with horror, and whom he accompanied in his ignominious flight from Lucknow, he must of necessity be in a position to tell us whether he is alive or not. The value, therefore, of this evidence can scarcely be overlooked." With our cotemporary, "we should like to learn what action Lord Elgin intends to take, now that the great rebel and murderer is, on the confession of his own brother, known to be alive." Will Madho Rao be sent round to Cawnpore for trial, as the Rao Sahib was? He should be.—Delhi Gazette.

FANCY FAIRS AND FANCY BUYERS.—The complaint of a Native correspondent, that he and his countrymen were not treated with sufficient respect, or admitted in sufficient numbers, at the late fancy fair, is another proof of the absurdity of admitting any Natives whatever, excepting gentlemen of high rank, at gatherings which are so essentially European as balls and fancy fairs, which but very few Asiatics can understand, and at which still fewer know how to behave. We know for a positive fact that though it was understood that the articles were sold for the purposes of charity, and that European ladies were selling the articles for charity, yet at every stall those Natives who were admitted, excepting the very few who knew better, did not hesitate to crowd round much in the same way as they would have done in Burra Bazar, and not only to remark to each other upon the age or inferiority of the articles, but actually to offer very much lower prices for many things, on the plea that they could be bought much cheaper at the China bazaar. Of course, being Natives, their ignorance was excused, and their impertinence passed over; but we can safely say, that had any European made similar remarks, or attempted a similar style of bazaar bargaining at a fancy fair for charitable purposes within the limits of the British Isles, he would have been promptly turned out and solemnly warned not to make his appearance there again.

A NEW PRAYER FOR OUR RULERS.—The following Prayer, as reconstructed by the Right Reverend the Metropolitan, was read for the first time in St. Mary's Church:—A Prayer to be used in India in the place of the prayer for the High Court of Parliament. "Most Gracious God, we humbly beseech Thee, as for the Empire in general so especially for the High Court of Parliament, and those who bear office under our Queen: And here in India we pray for the Viceroy, the Governors, the Councils, the Judges of the High Courts, and all others entrusted with authority in this land: That Thou wouldst be pleased to direct and prosper all their consultations and proceedings, to the advancement of Thy Glory, the good of Thy Church, the safety, honour, and welfare of our Sovereign and her dominions; that all things may be so ordered and settled by their endeavours, upon the best and surest foundations, that peace and happiness, truth and justice, religion and piety, may be established among us for all generations. These and all other necessities, for them, for us, and Thy whole Church, we humbly beg in the name and mediation of Jesus Christ, our most blessed Lord and Saviour. Amen."—Deccan Herald.

GENERAL SIR SYDNEY COTTON, K.C.B.—On the 18th of November Sir Sydney Cotton, en route to England, via Jullunder, presented H.M.'s

94th Regt. with new colours. We give a report of the speeches at the dinner given to the General by the officers of the regiment. The cloth being removed, Major Mercer, at present commanding the regiment, rose to propose the General's health:—"Gentlemen,—I rise to propose a toast in which I feel that every true soldier will join in drinking with as great pleasure as I do. Myself a soldier, the son of a soldier, and drilled by that same drill-sergeant, who, as my father's pay-sergeant, had nursed me, so it is indeed with feelings of the most lively satisfaction that I find myself in a position to drink the health of so distinguished a soldier as Major-General Sir Sydney Cotton. Every who has served under Sir Sydney must feel conscious of the untiring exertion on his part to instil into all ranks that love for their profession which he himself possesses in so eminent a degree. Everyone knows," continued the Major, turning to the General, "that you, Sir Sydney, at a critical period of the Empire, had the honour, and I must say it was an honour, even to you, Sir Sydney, to sit in conclave with two other untiring spirits, on whom hung the destinies of the Empire. Gentlemen, it was to the wisdom, the energy, and the indomitable resolution of Sir Sydney Cotton, Sir Herbert Edwardes, and Brigadier-General Nicholson, that the Frontier Force during the Mutiny of 1857 stood firm, the wild and fanatic Mussulman tribes of the frontier were kept at bay by an iron hand, mutiny in the force trod out with an iron heel, and at a time when many a miscalled Briton was thinking of the river Indus as a means of flight, and of England as a home; this immortal three thought but of the honour of Great Britain. Springing, sir, as you do, from an illustrious race, whether we regard Sir Robert the Cavalier, Sir Willoughby the Commander-in-Chief, or the illustrious Combermere, the captor of Bhurtpore, you, Sir Sydney, are inferior to none; and, Sir Sydney, whether you retire into private life, or whether further ennobled at the hand of your sovereign, whose august authority you have so well upheld, you obtain further employment, we feel sure that you will realize the motto of your ancient house—'In utraque fortunâ paratus.' Sir Sydney, we beg to drink your health, and a prosperous voyage for yourself and family to your native country." This toast having been drunk with the most perfect cordiality, the Major-General arose, and in a most feeling manner replied,—"Major Mercer, officers of her Majesty's 94th Regiment, and gentlemen, who have so readily responded to the very moving way in which my health has been drunk, it is because I feel as a soldier, and because I recognise in the officers, non-commissioned officers and men of this fine regiment a congenial spirit that I feel the full force of the speech in which Major Mercer has proposed my health. Gentlemen, it has always been the highest aim of my life faithfully to fulfil the trust which has been confided to me by her most Gracious Majesty. It was, sir, as you truly observed, an honour at the most critical period of the Indian Empire to be associated with an Edwardes and a Nicholson; in doing as we did, we only fulfilled the trust committed to us by her Majesty. This I trust I shall always do, whether by instilling just ideas of drill and discipline, or in helping to quell mutiny and disloyalty. Believe me, gentlemen, I shall ever remember the occasion of this my visit to Jullundur, and in conclusion, I beg to return you my thanks for the manner in which you have drunk the health of myself and family."

ST. ANDREW'S FESTIVAL IN CALCUTTA.—An ardent Scotchman, whose experience of St. Andrew's festivals extends over some ten years, assures us that the dinner of Nov. 30 surpassed its predecessors. The Viceroy was not there, but, as the first Scotchman in the world, he was represented by the Hon. Mr. Thurlow, his private secretary, and, like a true Highland chief, sent a fat buck to the table. The Hon. W. S. Seton-Karr, himself a Borderer from the land which sent both Malcolm and Minto to India, made a most eloquent and courteous chairman, and was especially happy in his treatment of the toast of "The Viceroy, and the Land we live in," hailing the former as "our own countryman, as the countryman of Lord Dalhousie." General Showers replied for the Army and Navy. Mr. A. G. Macpherson, the croupier, proposed "The Land o' Cakes," "The Press," and "The Trades," Messrs. G. Smith and W. Brett replying for the Press, and Mr. Laurie for the Trades. The croupier conclusively rebutted the malicious slander that the first is "a fine land to come frae" by the assertion that it was far better to return to. Nothing was said about the still greater advantage of not leaving it at all. A. F. Mackay, Esq., of H.M.'s 92nd Highlanders, immortalised himself by the perfect definition which he gave of the "Lasses," whom the Hon. A. Stewart represented. Mr. J. Brown proposed "the Memory of Bruce and Wallace," and Mr. J. Bruce "the Poets of Scotland." The Hon. G. Campbell replied for "the Judges and the Bar," which Mr. McCrindle proposed; and Mr. Wauchope, C.B., for "the Civil Service," which Mr. S. Gladstone proposed. Both Mr. Campbell and Mr. Wauchope were regarded as rather "faithless loons," for bemoaning the gradually decreasing number of Scotchmen in the civil service, by those who remembered that the first competition-wallah in India is a Scotchman, and that their countrymen are generally at the top of the lists. Mr. Sandeman, C.S., waxed eloquent over "the Merchants," the majority of whom in India are Scotch, and Mr. Bullen replied. "Our Guests," treated by the chairman, brought up the Hon. Mr. Thurlow, who repaid the compliment by proposing the Chairman, and he in his turn did full justice to the energies of Mr. P. Anderson, the honorary secretary, while Mr. Macfarlane remembered the Croupier. The evening was perfect, with one exception. The nine pipers and splendid band of H.M.'s 92nd Highlanders, the former in solemn procession marching round and round the table as in old feudal days, contributed more than at first sight appeared, to the spirit of the festival, and their services ought to have been specially acknowledged. Colonel Lockhart and all the officers were present. Highland reels, to the strains of the pipers, were witnessed in perfection long after midnight. Yet such is the "canniness" of Scotchmen that the merriment never became boisterous. This most successful of the too few annual public gatherings in Calcutta, our enthusiastic Scotch friend assures us, will long be remembered.

LE BAS PRIZE.—We notice that the Le Bas prize at Cambridge given annually for the best English essay on a subject of general literature, to be occasionally chosen with reference to the history, institutions, and probable destinies and prospects of the Anglo-Indian empire, has been adjudged to Francis Cottrell Hodgson, B.A., King's College.

DR. BUIST'S LIBRARY.—The Allahabad Gazette mentions that the greater portion of the library of the late Dr. Buist was sent to England. His forty or fifty files of newspapers were sold as waste paper.

CAPTAINS T. PULMAN AND A. H. HEATH, of the Royal, late Bengal Artillery, have arrived at the Presidency for the purpose of organising and training two new batteries of artillery, one of which is, we believe, to be stationed at Barrackpore, and the other at Dum-Dum. These batteries will be formed from the artillery recruits now arriving, and about to arrive, from England, and the local company of artillery now in Fort William. We are glad to see this latter-mentioned body about to be utilised and moved about, as "local" does not mean Calcutta, but Indian, and a permanent stay at the Presidency must have a Capuan influence on any British troops. The men in question can be utilised all over India or Asia; and as they have availed themselves of the right to be local, they can be detached and removed to their batteries, should those with which they may at any time be serving get orders for Europe.—Englishman.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE RAJAH OF TRAVANCORE is at present on a visit at Madras. He came down to the Presidency a week ago, and was received at the station by Mr. Arbuthnot, the Chief Secretary to Government, and a numerous body of native gentlemen, by whom he was escorted to Brodie Castle, which has been fitted up for his reception at the expense of our Government. As he is the only independent rajah left in this part of the empire everything has been done on the part of our officials to show him that respect to which he is entitled. The Governor held a grand durbar for his reception on Tuesday last, and on Friday evening all the troops in garrison were paraded for his inspection. He has visited the gun carriage manufactory, the School of Arts, and other public places in Madras, and appears to be well satisfied with everything that he has seen. The admirable manner in which he has conducted the government of his country has frequently elicited well-deserved praise, both from our Government and the press; and he seems at all times fully alive to the benefits which must accrue to his own people from carrying on his Government in an enlightened spirit. The reception he has met with in Madras must make him feel that the principles which guided our policy towards independent native rajahs has undergone a great change for the better, and that our grasping policy is now at an end. His Dewan Madava Row is a man educated at the Presidency College, and who has shown all through his career that the training which he received in Madras has not been wasted.

THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.—At a late meeting of the Chamber of Commerce the post of secretary to the Chamber was filled up by the appointment of Mr. C. A. Lawson, vice Mr. Norfor, promoted over the heads of the entire Uncovenanted Service of the Presidency. Mr. Lawson is favourably known as the author of a work on Cochin, and is understood to possess considerable mercantile knowledge.

CHARGE OF CHEATING.—Colonel Colbeck has been occupied, at the Royapettah Court, in the investigation of a charge of cheating, which was preferred against an officer of H.M.'s 60th Regt., and the case was committed for trial. There are some singular circumstances in connection with the case, which, for obvious reasons, we refrain from publishing at present.—Madras Athenaeum.

VOLUNTEERS.—We observe the formation of a Volunteer Corps, entitled the "Behar Mounted Rifle Corps." A mounted corps is certainly more adapted than Infantry to English habits and necessities in this climate. Many a man would canter to the parade ground on his way and go through his exercises in place of his morning ride, who would be slow to do anything of the kind on foot. If the Rifle Club of Madras would organise themselves in this fashion, a very efficient body of volunteer cavalry might be constituted ready to do good service, and this without any fresh indent on the energy of the members of the Club.

CAPTAIN SINCLAIR, commanding a regiment of the contingent, has been wounded whilst at the head of his regiment at Sungum, a place within sixty miles of Hyderabad. The regiment was marching to garrison Jaulnah, when two Arabs posted themselves on the road. As they could not be prevailed upon to get out of the way, Captain Sinclair got off his horse to insist on their removal, and was stabbed by one of them. The two Arabs were immediately struck down, but not severely injured, for the next we hear of them is of their having arrived at a village twenty miles from the scene of action. Captain Sinclair's wound is said to be not dangerous.

MATRIMONY IN MADRAS.—Our readers are aware that in two most excellent institutions orphan girls of European and mixed descent are tended and trained up to become helpmates for our brave soldiers. Besides the indispensable "three R's," they are taught to sew, and to wash, and to bake, and to cook, and that most rare of feminine accomplishments, how to nurse. There is always, we believe, a select stock of girls on hand qualified and willing to take on them vows of matrimony at the shortest notice. Suddenly the hour of proposal comes, and also the man. John Smith, a stalwart gunner, or Corporal Brown, of the Dragoons, obtains permission from his commanding officer to marry, and, with testimonials of good conduct in his hand, he presents himself before the superintendent of the asylum and intimates his connubial purpose. The arrangements now adopted to pair off the gunner or dragoon are not quite the same as in days of yore. The marriageable maidens are no longer trotted round the compound, or drawn up in line before the perplexed eyes of the husband elect. The process of inspection and selection is conducted with a little more of the privacy conventionally due to ante-nuptial negotiations. Smith or Brown is seated in a room with the superintendent, who sends a summons for Martha. With a wise commercial reserve the superintendent keeps back the most tempting articles until an endeavour has first been made to get off the oldest and least saleable part of her stock. "Martha," very likely, is a lank damsel, something like Kelly's monument in consumption, and unless the customer be "not at all particular," an objection is made—the reverse of the objection urged by Mantalini to the two countesses, who had "no outlines at all," "Martha" has too much outline, is all outline, in fact. The dragoon would like the outline better filled in, so "Jane" obeys the next call, who is plump, but squab. The military sense of correct dressing is offended by the idea of a wife who only reaches to the hips of her husband, so a desire is faintly murmured to see another. A third appears, who hits the juste milieu of proportions, and Smith smiles a gratified assent, communicating his approval to the superintendent in the unromantic phrase, "That one will do." "That one" is next consulted, who seldom, if ever, has any objection to offer. The approved maiden whispers consent, and the bargain is ratified on the spot, not in the customary pleasant manner—for amorous blandishments the superintendent could on no account permit—but possibly by Smith offering his extemporary fiancée a rupee, "to get summit to please herself." The only other form necessary is to obtain the sanction of the directors, and to publish the banns.—Madras Times.—We understand that the same system prevailed at Kidderpore lower asylum, with this difference, that the candidate for matrimony being seated by the side of the matron, the young ladies came into the room singly at one door, and unless then and there chosen by the wife-hunter, they immediately retired by the opposite door, and once out of the room, it was contrary to rule to call any lady back on the plea that she was preferred to those who followed. The old story of picking up a crooked stick in the forest will occur to the intelligent reader as conveying the same moral.—Lahore Chronicle.

MISCELLANEOUS.

SIR JOSEPH ARNOULD.—A rumour has been lately circulating that Sir Joseph Arnould has resigned the Vice-Chancellorship of the University of Bombay. We should regret, on special grounds, to hear this statement confirmed. There is no one who could be named as Sir Joseph's successor who would have anything like the same qualifications as he has himself possessed. Sir Joseph Arnould, as a young man, obtained the highest honours in the University of Oxford, in which he was a first-class man, a prize man, and the fellow of a college. There is no one, either in or out of the Government, whose prima facie fitness for the office will compare with that of Sir Joseph Arnould, about whom, moreover, we are enabled to say from experience that he has worked well and done good service. Perhaps our readers are hardly aware that, but for Sir Joseph, there would have been up to this time no examination for the B. A. degree in the University of Bombay. An examination has taken place, and it was the first public act of Sir Bartle Frere to confer degrees upon the successful candidates, one of whom has since gone on to pass his examination to be Master of Arts. But it is none the less true, that a strenuous and narrow-minded opposition was made to the proposal for holding degree examinations, by persons who preferred the letter of certain rules to the spirit, and who wished to visit upon the under-graduates a punishment for the dilatoriness they had themselves shown in getting the University into operation. Sir Joseph Arnould, however, overruled this pedantry, and he was supported by the general sense of the Senate.

ENSIGN EASTALL.—Ensign C. E. R. Eastall, doing duty with the 1st Battalion of H. M.'s 18th Royal Irish, was lately condemned by Court Martial at Secunderabad to be cashiered for lying to his commanding officer regarding the payment of money due by him to a corporal. Sir Hope Grant remitted the sentence on the ground of his extreme youth.—Friend of India.

THE VICTORIA MUSEUM.—The foundation stone of the Victoria Museum, Bombay, was laid on the 19th December, and the opening of the Victoria and Albert Gardens was at the same time celebrated. The names of both mark the assumption by her Majesty of the direct government of India in 1858. Sir Bartle and Lady Frere, and all the members of Council were present. After an address from the Hon. Mr. Juggonath Sunkersett, the Governor replied and laid the foundation stone. The museum is under the care of Drs. Birdwood and Bhow Dajee. A procession was formed through the gardens, where several native girls were assembled. Lady Frere replied briefly to another address from Mr. Sunkersett, and a pleasing ceremony terminated. Lady Frere said:—"I have much pleasure in declaring the Victoria Gardens opened. I trust they may long continue a monument of the taste and munificence of the leading merchants of Bombay, and a source of pure and rational enjoyments to its inhabitants. I hope that many of my friends amongst the young native ladies around me will realise the pleasure which English ladies find in their gardens, and which no lady in her dominions enjoys more than her Most Gracious Majesty, whose name these gardens will in future bear." Due honour was paid to the name of Dr. Buist, to whom chiefly both museum and gardens owe their existence.

CHINA.

HONG KONG, Dec. 1.—The political news of the past fortnight in China and Japan is not uninteresting. Events are in motion in both countries which indicate progress in very definite directions.

In Japan the departure from Jeddo of the Daimios and their families still goes on. Consequent upon the breaking up of so many sumptuous establishments large quantities of valuables and curiosities are being sold in the capital, and the houses themselves taken down.

In Pekin everything is quiet.

From the three northern ports there is no news of importance. We hear that Mr. Morgan, who has been for some time Acting-Consul at Tientsin, proceeds to England by next mail. In the course of a month communications with the north by sea will be closed for the winter.

With regard to the rebels, we have to record an engagement at Pao-kong, a large village about twelve miles north-east of Tsing-poo, on the road between that city and Kah-ding. Colonel Burgevine (Ward's successor) having been informed that a large force of rebels was encamped in that direction, proceeded with a force of 1,000 of his drilled Chinese, on the 12th ult., to look out for the enemy. On reaching Pao-kong it was found that about 10,000 Taepings had entrenched themselves strongly in a camp of fifteen stockades.

Nothing was done on that day, but on the following day four guns and two mortars were put in position, and the place was gallantly carried after an hour's firing. The storming party was led by a brave young Chinese officer named Wong-ee-poo, to whom Admiral Hope had presented a sword for gallantry. This young soldier, however, was mortally wounded. The Taeping Chief, Wo-wang, was also killed after he had rallied his men several times. The rebel loss is set down at 2,300 killed, and that of Colonel Burgevine at five killed and fifteen wounded. This looks like exaggeration. An English surgeon attended to the wounded men. This is the most effective display that has yet been made by unassisted Chinese troops, and it confirms the opinions expressed by almost every English officer who served in the North during the campaign of 1860, that, under proper training, the Chinese would make most efficient soldiers.

The great movement at present in contemplation by the Imperial forces is the capture of Nankin. The Russians are said to have offered their assistance; and we hear that the Tartar General Toh, of the garrison of Ching-chow, in the same province as Hankow, has been ordered by the Government to join the besieging force at Nankin; he has just gained some victories over the Shen-si rebels.

At Hankow the busy season is over; the rebuilding of the city continues, and in a year the whole will have been rebuilt. The sickness which has been so prevalent in Shanghai and elsewhere has fortunately not reached Hankow. We reported lately that bands of robbers had appeared within thirty miles of the city; these have since retreated, and are understood to be crossing the border into Honan, where the people are used to their constant presence. These banditti were not considered really dangerous, as, being badly armed, they always disappeared before the troops sent against them.

From Shanghai we hear of further alarms of rebels in the neighbourhood.

From Ningpo reports have been sent of a "difficulty" having occurred with some Chinese soldiers and the Tao-tai. It is said that the latter, indignant at not being properly saluted in the street by one of the former, caused punishment to be inflicted, which resulted in mutiny and bloodshed. The report requires confirmation; as it stands it looks very bad.

From Manila we learn that, on the 6th ult., a violent storm of wind, said to be a typhoon, was experienced in the northern provinces, and was felt with more or less intensity in various districts. Much damage has been done to houses, roads, bridges, and to the crops. The shipwrecks reported are those of the Spanish barques Amistad and Manuelita, and the brigs Estrella and San José; various coasting craft have also been lost; but the most deplorable wreck was that of the American ship Nabob, of Boston, Baxter, master, bound to Shanghai with coals. She was wrecked on the coast near to Aparri, Cagayan: seventeen men and one woman (the steward's wife) were drowned, and fourteen saved themselves by swimming. Among the latter were the captain, first mate, assistant mate, carpenter, and steward. The weather is still hot in Manila, and the barometer low.

From Canton we hear that the Viceroy Laou has been degraded in consequence of the charges urged against him at Peking. He is succeeded in office by Liu-chang-yew, formerly Governor of Kwang-si; but for some months Laou will remain in charge. The new Viceroy is unknown to foreigners.

In Hong Kong matters go on as usual. The opium swindle, which has worn various aspects since it first burst on the public, is now likely to be heard of for the last time. Rustumjee Burjorjee, who at one time affected so much innocence that people fancied he would sue the banks he had cheated for loss of market and margin of price—but which, by the way, he could not have done, as he was a shareholder in the receiving ship—has been sentenced to ten years' penal servitude for stealing the opium.—Overland China Mail.

APPOINTMENT OF VOLUNTEERS TO THE LINE.

Military Dept., Dec. 1.—No. 1,063.—Under instructions from the Right Hon. the Sec. of State for India, and with reference to G.O. No. 272 of March 11, it is notified that the present existing vacancies in the grade of cornet and ensign in the new line regiments of cavalry and infantry—[namely, 19th hussars, 3; 20th hussars, 4; 21st hussars, 4; 101st regt., 4; 103rd regt., 5; 104th regt., 6; 106th regt., 5; 107th regt., 7; 109th regt., 5]—will be filled, as far as practicable, from volunteers from among the cornets and ensigns on the general lists of the three presidencies.

Every cornet or ensign, therefore, on these lists who wishes to volunteer should state, without delay, whether he is desirous of joining one of the new regiments of cavalry or of infantry as cornet or ensign, as the case may be, with the understanding that, whether he select the cavalry or the infantry, the regiment and his place in the regiment will be determined by his relative seniority among the officers now volunteering, whether they be cavalry or infantry officers.

Each officer is at liberty to volunteer conditionally on being appointed to a particular regiment and in a particular place; but he will readily understand that such conditions can only be acceded to in the event of their not involving any interference with the claims of his seniors.

Under these circumstances, should a compliance with the conditions mentioned by the officer so volunteering prove to be impracticable, he will be considered as not having volunteered at all.

Applications submitted under this order should be forwarded to the Adjutant gen.'s office at each Presidency on or before Feb. 1 next, for transmission to the Govt. of India.

MUSKETRY INSTRUCTION.

Nov. 13.—The C. in C. is pleased to direct that troops or companies of corps are, if practicable, to be put through the annual course of musketry instruction previous to being detached to out-stations, and that the troops or companies, first for detachment, should, as a rule, be those first exercised.

2. In cases where time will not allow of this being done before the march of a detachment, or when a detachment will not be relieved in time for its instruction to take place after its return to head quarters, and when a range and appliances are available at the out-station, an officer and a sergeant instructor of musketry may be sent from head quarters at the public expense for the purpose of putting the detachment through the annual musketry course; but previous to doing so application is to be made to the chief inspector of musketry, through the usual channel, for the sanction of the C. in C., the application being accompanied by a certificate setting forth the cause why the detachment could not be instructed at head quarters, and also by a memorandum detailing the expense to be incurred both going and returning. These documents, together with the authority of the C. in C., will be eventually attached to the bill submitted to the audit department.

3. When the detachment consists of three or more troops or companies, an assistant sergeant instructor should always be attached to it, and if a Hythe or Fleetwood-trained officer be available, he should also accompany it.

Major A. Smith, late 24th N.I., is permitted to do duty at the Landour convalescent depot, till further orders.

Major T. R. Snow, late 4th Eur. L.C., late acting comdnt. of 5th Bengal cav., is appointed to do gen. duty at Moradabad, on expiration of his leave.

SOLDIERS' GARDENS.

Nov. 15.—In continuation of previous orders and circulars, [G.O.C.C. Dec. 10, 1855. Circular from the Quartermaster general of the army to officers commanding divisions, dated Jan. 16, 1857.] and in view to making generally known the liberal consideration of Government in the matter of soldiers' gardens, the cultivation of which, according to system and rules already promulgated, the C. in C. most strongly desires to promote. H.E. Sir Hugh Rose now publishes for the guidance of all officers commanding divisions, brigades, and stations, and for the encouragement of all soldiers disposed to turn their leisure to such a good purpose, the following rules, which have been sanctioned by Government, regulating the annual distribution of prizes to the most industrious and successful cultivators of such gardens.

2. Committees as before ordered are to assemble at such time of the year as the local authorities may deem best, so as to allow of the several descriptions of gardens (flower or vegetable, cultivated entirely by the soldiers themselves, either in barrack or regimental gardens) being properly inspected, on the understanding, however, that prizes are not to be awarded to individuals, or collectively, more than once a year.

3. Competition is to be strictly confined to the men of the same corps or detachment, and the following scale of prizes to be thus allotted is to be considered the maximum under all circumstances, viz. :—

For general competition by each regiment of British cavalry or infantry, or division of artillery, equal in its composition to a brigade—

- 1 prize of twenty-five rupees.
- 1 prize of twenty rupees.

And for general competition by a wing of a regiment, or division of artillery, equal to a demi-brigade, cantoned separately—

- 1 prize of twenty rupees.
- 1 prize of ten rupees.

And for competition by each battery, or each troop and company of the above—

- 1 prize of fifteen rupees.
- 1 prize of ten rupees.
- 1 prize of five rupees.

4. It is to be discretionary with committees to award these prizes in full or in part, according as they may consider the exertions of the men to deserve; and in the event of any battery, troop, or company having been unusually industrious, and another the reverse, they may transfer the prizes from those who have not been industrious to those who have.

5. Regimental non-commissioned staff are not eligible to compete for these prizes, unless it can be certified that their garden produce has been bona fide the result of their own labour; in this case they can compete for the general prizes detailed in paragraph 3.

6. In order that the prizes may be paid on the spot to the successful competitors, sums equal to the aggregate amount of these several prizes are to be obtained by the presidents of the committees at the prescribed period, under a station order, from the executive commissariat officer of the station, and in the event of the committee not awarding the whole sum, the balance is to be repaid to the commissariat officer.

7. As soon as practicable after the proceedings of the committees have terminated, a contingent bill in detail on the Commissariat Department should be forwarded by the president to the Deputy Assistant Quartermaster general of the division or district for the amount actually presented as prizes, and, after having been countersigned by the officer commanding the division or district, the bill should be returned for delivery to the commissariat officer who had advanced the money, and thus enable him to settle his accounts.

8. The C. in C. observed at his inspections that soldiers do not like or frequent gardens at a distance from their barracks, however good or well cultivated they may be, and that, on the other hand, they prefer and cultivate gardens close to their barracks, because they can go to them in undress and without trouble to themselves, watering them also with the means at their disposal from ablution rooms.

9. The C. in C. requests commanding officers to bear in mind the orders H.E. has previously issued on this subject, and to do their utmost to encourage their soldiers to make and cultivate the gardens close to their barracks. H.E. also wishes that the distribution of prizes should be considered as a "fete" for the regiment, and be a holiday for the men at large, the band playing, and the regimental school children attending, while the distribution takes place, and Sir Hugh Rose will feel obliged if all officers would make a point of attending the distribution.

10. All correspondence on the subject of soldiers' gardens is to be made through the officers of the Quartermaster general's department to divisions or army head quarters.

Adj. Gen's Office, H.M. British Forces, Calcutta, Nov. 13.—Head Qrs., Simla, Oct. 25.—No. 166.—The C. in C. in India is pleased to make the following promotions, until her Majesty's pleasure shall be known :—

PROMOTIONS IN THE LINE.

No. 1,078 of 1862.—H. E. the Governor-General in Council is pleased to direct the publication in G. O. of the following military letter from the Right Hon. the Secretary of State for India, No. 396, Oct. 23, 1862, and of the Royal Warrant and Regulations therein referred to :—

INDIA OFFICE, London, Oct. 23, 1862.

MILITARY, No. 396.

H. E. THE RIGHT HON. THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL OF INDIA IN COUNCIL.

MY LORD,—I forward herewith a copy of a Royal Warrant, dated June 21st last, in the Regulations attached to which it is provided that promotions shall be made in regiments of the Line in all cases of a regimental major being appointed to the staff.

2. Having communicated with H.R.H. the General C. in C., and the Secretary of State for War on the subject of the application of the Warrant to Line regiments serving in India, with reference to the arrangements which was made known to you in my Despatch No. 439 of 15th Nov., 1861, paragraph 2, I have been informed that H.R.H. the General C. in C. has caused a communication to be addressed to the C. in C. in India to the effect that no field officer of a regiment serving in India need be seconded on appointment to a staff situation from a regiment which has more than three field officers on its establishment.

3. I have the satisfaction of informing you that the 2nd paragraph of the Warrant now forwarded which provides for the promotion to the Brevet rank of Lieutenant-Colonel of substantive majors after the completion of their service on the staff, will apply to officers of H.M.'s Indian forces other than those of the staff corps.

I have, &c.,
(Sd.) C. WOOD.

Circular No. 766.

VICTORIA R.

Whereas it has been represented to us that it is expedient to improve the position of regimental majors holding staff appointments in our army, and of captains and subalterns of the cavalry and infantry employed at the Royal Military College, Sandhurst: it is our will and pleasure that, from the date of this our Royal Warrant, officers of the regimental rank of major serving on full pay, who may be appointed to the staff of our army as assistant adjutant generals or assistant quartermaster generals, and captains and subalterns of the cavalry and infantry serving on full pay, who may obtain employment as professors and masters, or as captains of companies of gentlemen cadets, or on the staff at the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, shall, under the regulations hereunto annexed, be continued on the strength of their regiments as supernumerary officers, and retain their position and claim to promotion therein, the majors on the staff receiving as regimental pay an amount equal to the half-pay of their rank, in addition to staff pay, and the officers employed at the Royal Military College a fixed rate of College pay in lieu of regimental pay.

It is also our will and pleasure that officers of the substantive rank of major, who have completed their term of service in the staff appointments of assistant adjutant-general, assistant quartermaster-general, military secretary, and assistant military secretary, and have performed the duties thereof to the satisfaction of the general commanding in chief of our army and of our secretary of state for war, shall, on removal from the staff, be promoted by brevet to the rank of lieutenant-colonel.

It having also been represented to us that it is expedient to revise the system under which artillery and engineer officers are at present employed in appointments on the staff corresponding with those hereinbefore-mentioned, as well as in those of deputy adjutant general, deputy quartermaster general and colonel on the staff, it is our further will and pleasure that regimental colonels, and lieutenant colonels of artillery and engineers, who may hereafter be nominated to such appointments, shall be placed on the same footing in respect to pay, as officers of cavalry and infantry, and that such officers, as well as colonels of artillery, commanding certain districts or divisions with the rank of colonel on the staff, and captains and subalterns of the royal artillery and royal engineers employed at the Royal Military College and Royal Military Academy, shall be governed by the Regulations hereunto annexed.

Given at our Court at St. James's, this Twenty-first day of June, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-two, in the Twenty-sixth year of our reign.

By H.M.'s Command,

G. C. LEWIS.

REGULATIONS REFERRED TO IN THE PRECEDING WARRANT.

1. On the appointment of a regimental major to the staff, under the provisions of the annexed Royal Warrant, the step will go in the regiment without purchase; the cornetcy or ensigncy vacated by this promotion being filled by purchase, for the benefit of the Reserve Fund.

2. On removal of the major from the staff on completion of the regulated period of staff service, viz., five years, or on the resignation of his appointment on grounds satisfactory to the General Commanding-in-Chief and Secretary of State for War, he will continue as a supernumerary officer, to receive as regimental pay an amount equal to the half-pay of his rank (even though he may then be the senior major of the regiment), till a vacancy shall occur into which he can fall.

3. If, however, a vacancy shall happen by the sale of the lieutenant colonelcy, and the supernumerary major shall purchase, the existence of the supernumerary majority will be put an end to by payment from the reserve fund of the difference between the amount to be paid by the major so promoted and the value of the lieutenant colonelcy.

4. If the major on the staff shall die while so employed no promotion will take place, as the regiment will already have had the benefit of promotion in the vacancy occasioned by his appointment to the staff, but any other death vacancy occurring among the field officers will be filled, as usual, by promotion without purchase, unless there be a supernumerary major whose period of service on the staff has expired.

5. If the major, while employed on the staff, shall succeed to the lieutenant colonelcy of the regiment, whether by purchase or otherwise, he will be required to relinquish his staff appointment, and join his regiment.

6. If the major, while employed on the staff, shall hold the rank of brevet lieut. colonel, he shall, on attaining the rank of regimental lieut. colonel, reckon his staff service as qualifying service for the rank of colonel, under the five years' rule, as provided in Clause 9 of the Warrant of Oct. 14, 1858, for majors and brevet lieut. colonels falling into the temporary command of regiments.

7. If the major shall resign his staff appointment on grounds not satisfactory to the General Commanding in Chief and Secretary of State for War, or be displaced for misconduct or incapacity, he will cease to be entitled to the benefit of this regulation, and be placed upon the half-pay list.

8. Vacancies occasioned by the appointment of captains and lieutenants to the Royal Military College, Sandhurst (comprising the staff college and cadet's college), under the provisions of the Warrant, will be filled up in the regiment, without purchase; the cornetcy or ensigncy vacated by promotion, or by appointment to the Royal Military College, being filled by purchase, for the benefit of the reserve fund.

9. If a captain should be promoted to the rank of major, or a lieutenant to the rank of captain, or a cornet or ensign to the rank of lieutenant, by purchase, while at the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, the difference between the sum paid by him and the full value of the superior commission will be made up from the reserve fund, thereby putting an end to the supernumerary commission vacated by him; but a captain, on attaining the rank of major, whether by purchase or otherwise, will be required to join his regiment.

10. On promotion to higher regimental rank of a supernumerary cornet, ensign, or lieutenant, whether by purchase or otherwise, he will become a supernumerary in his new grade, and will carry up with him the officer next for promotion.

11. The principle in Clauses 2, 4, and 7 of these Regulations, applicable to majors on the staff, shall govern the appointments at the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, whatever may be the regimental rank of the officer.

12. Regimental colonels and lieutenant colonels of artillery and engineers, employed as colonels on the staff, and in other situations on the general staff referred to in the Warrant, will remain on the establishment of their brigades or corps, but will, in accordance with the practice in other branches of the service, only be allowed a sum equal to the half-pay of their regimental rank in addition to staff pay.

13. Regimental colonels of artillery commanding certain districts or divisions, with the rank of colonel on the staff, will remain on the establishment of their brigades, receiving such a reduced rate of staff pay as, with regimental full pay, will be equal in the aggregate to the established rate of regimental half-pay and the full rate of staff pay.

14. Lieut. colonels of artillery and engineers holding the appointment of deputy adjutant general or deputy quartermaster general, may retain their staff appointments when promoted to the regimental rank of colonel, should such promotion happen during the period prescribed for holding their staff appointments.

15. Lieut. colonels of artillery and engineers filling the appointments of assistant adjt. gen. or assistant quartermr. gen. will be required to relinquish their staff appointment on promotion to the rank of regimental colonel, should such promotion take place during their term of staff service.

16. Captains and subalterns of the royal artillery and royal engineers employed as professors and masters at the Royal Military College, Sandhurst (comprising the Staff College and Cadet's College), and Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, and as assistant inspectors of studies at the latter institution, will be continued as at present on the strength of their regiment or corps, as supernumeraries to the establishment, and receive their pay and allowances under the regulations specially applicable to supernumerary captains and subalterns.

17. Captains of the royal artillery and royal engineers, if promoted to the rank of regimental field officer during the term of their employment as professors and masters, will be required to relinquish their appointments and join their brigades or corps.

18. Although the clauses from 12 to 17 have been framed with special reference to officers of artillery and engineers, it is to be understood that the general provisions of these Regulations are also to be adopted in every way in which they can be made applicable to those two services.

Powers of Local Governments.

Financial Dept., Nymee Tal, Nov. 12.—No. 2,063a.
The following extract from the proceedings of the Government of India, in the Financial department, No. 519a, dated Sept. 30, is published for general information:—

Read again paragraph 3 of financial resolution, dated Nov. 15, 1860, by which local governments were empowered to re-distribute among the sections of a department the sanctioned items composing the aggregate grant allowed for that department in the budget on the conditions:—

1st. That any alterations in the distribution of the charge of a department be at once reported with all details to the Government of India.

2nd. That no salary of a gazetted officer be altered or re-distributed without the sanction of Government previously obtained.

3rd. That no general rates of pay or allowances shall be altered, nor any charge incurred which can pledge the Government beyond the year to which the estimate relates without the sanction of the Government of India.

Read again paragraphs 42 and 48 of letter to the Government of Madras, dated 21st June, 1862, stating that the powers conferred on local governments by paragraph 3 of the resolution of 17th November, 1860, cannot be conveniently enlarged at present, but that the limitations of those powers will be interpreted in a liberal spirit, and that, when once the budget estimates have been passed, special applications to this Government for sanction of alterations made within prescribed limits, or of fresh charges on account of salaries, establishments, and contingencies, which can be met from budget grants, shall not be necessary, but shall be superseded by a monthly return of all such alterations and charges to be transmitted by the local governments on the first of the month following that in which they may have been sanctioned, and by a return from the civil paymaster, which will be sent to this department through the deputy auditor and accountant general, with two additional columns of remarks, in which it will be the duty of the civil paymaster and deputy auditor and accountant general to indicate any deviation from prescribed rules which may appear to require the notice of this Government.

Remarks.—Maj. J. J. Hamilton is the incumbent of an appointment, the consolidated salary of which is Rs. 500 a-month, while the pay of his rank as major in the staff corps is Rs. 640-14. Maj. Hamilton claims the full pay of his rank. The military dept. forwards the case to the committee of secretaries, requesting an opinion as to the best means of adjusting the pay of an officer in a case where the staff corps pay of his rank is higher than the consolidated salary of his civil appointment. In the opinion of Govt., in the military dept., Maj. Hamilton is entitled to the staff corps pay of his rank.

The committee of secretaries reports its opinion that, under H.M.'s Warrant, every officer must be held to be legally entitled to the staff corps pay of his rank in the staff corps, so long as he is required to remain in India, even when holding a civil appointment the emoluments of which are inferior to such pay. But as in the civil departments fixed salaries, proportionate to the duties to be performed, are attached to appointments, the committee considers it would not be right to increase those salaries as a civil charge. Any excess of staff corps pay above civil salary should, in the committee's opinion, be treated as an item of military expenditure. The committee further recommends that the military department should consider each case as it arises, and should determine whether, with reference to the special circumstances involved, it is expedient to employ such officer in a situation whereby a non-effective charge against the military dept. is created.

Order.—The Gov. gen. in Council considers it objectionable in principle that officers should receive different rates of pay for doing precisely the same duties, and H.E. in Council observes that under the proposed arrangement there would be no check in the tendency to appoint to subordinate offices officers drawing by reason of their rank higher pay than that attached to those offices, because the charge for the increased pay would not fall on the department employing the officer, but on the military department, which would view it as a temporary saving.

H.E. the Gov. gen. in Council accordingly resolves that the proposition of the committee of secretaries shall be recommended to the Secretary of State, with the remark that the Govt. of India advocates its adoption only to meet the case of officers who have received unusual promotion in the staff corps in consequence of recent events.

Care must, H.E. in Council remarks, be taken that this rule be not made an excuse for keeping up the numbers of the staff corps at a higher figure than is requisite. To this end, H.E. in Council directs that a report be made by the local Govt. whenever a staff corps officer in civil employ by army promotion obtains higher allowances than the salary sanctioned for his office, in order that each case may be specially inquired into by the Govt. of India and decided on its merits.

Every case like Maj. Hamilton's will, H.E. in Council remarks, be treated, pending the approval of the Secretary of State, in accordance with the suggestions of the committee of secretaries as applied in the case of Maj. Hamilton, after the report submitted by the local Govt. has been considered by the Govt. of India.

MAILS TO INDIA.

Mails to India and China, via Marseilles, are despatched from London as follows, viz.:—Those for Bombay packets, on the evening of the 3rd and 18th of each month; and those for Calcutta packets (including mails for Ceylon, Madras, and China), on the evenings of the 10th and 26th of each month. When any of these dates falls on a Sunday, the mails are made up on the following evening.

Letters and Newspapers can be forwarded to any part of India, via Bombay and Marseilles, and in most cases will reach their destination some days sooner than if despatched by the following Calcutta mail. The Bombay mails via Southampton, however, are no longer available for the transmission of Letters or Newspapers to the Madras Presidency.

Mails for the Mediterranean and all parts of India and China, except the Bombay Presidency, are despatched via Southampton on the mornings of the 4th and 20th, or, when either of these dates falls on Sunday, upon the previous evening.

Mails for the Mediterranean, the Presidency of Bombay, and Upper or North-West Provinces of Bengal and China, are despatched via Southampton, on the 12th and 27th of the month, except when these dates fall on Sunday, in which case they are forwarded on the previous evening.

THE BOMBARDMENT AND CAPTURE OF KAH-DING.

Head-quarters, near Kah-ding, Oct. 24, 1862.

SIR,—I have the honour to report, for your information, that the Chinese authorities having expressed their willingness to place a garrison in Kah-ding, if the allied forces would recapture it for them, the place was taken by storm after a bombardment of two hours, this morning, by the force under my immediate command, as well as the British naval force under Captain Borlase, C.B., and the French troops placed respectively at my disposal by Vice-Admiral Sir James Hope and Captain Fancon, commanding his Imperial Majesty's forces in China, also the so-called Ward's force, under the command of an American (Colonel Burgoviene), and Lieutenant Kingsley's 67th regiment, battalion of 500 Chinese, and six mortars, worked by Chinese, under Lieut. Cane, R.A.

The guns and mortars were got into position during the night, and opened fire so soon as the walls could be seen. At eight o'clock, two practicable breaches having been made, the French and British each established their bridges, the British under the direction of Lieutenant Knevitt, R.N., and Lieutenant Lyster, R.E. The storming parties of the 81st and 67th Regiments, under the command of Captain Christian, 81st Regiment, then planted their ladders and entered the place without opposition, the enemy escaping by the opposite side of the city. The place had been considerably strengthened since our last visit, by an outwork made to flank the walls, and protected by a sort of bomb-proof, which, however, was not proof against 8-inch mortar shells. I gave over the place to Colonel Burgoviene and his men, and, except the storming parties, none of her Majesty's naval or military forces were allowed to enter.

The recapture of Kah-ding completes the radius of thirty miles round Shanghai, which it was decided should be cleared of the Taeping rebels. I trust that the excellent conduct of the troops under very tempting circumstances, and the very arduous nature of the service, will be favourably considered.

I wish to mention for favourable notice, Captain C. Gordon, commanding Royal Engineers; Captain Mansergh, deputy-assistant-adjutant-general; Capt. Gammell, deputy-assistant-quartermaster-general; Dr. Rennie, 81st Regiment, senior medical officer; Assistant-Commissary-General Thompson, in charge of commissariat; Lieutenant Jebb, 81st Regiment; and the Prince Wigenstein, of the 1st Prussian Lancer Guard Regiment, who acted as my aides-de-camp.

I take this opportunity of recording the great assistance I have invariably received on the occasions of the various expeditions from Mr. Consul Medhurst, and Mr. C. Alabaster, of the consular service.

I also wish to mention the services performed by Commander Strode, of her Majesty's ship Fulcan, who was employed during the whole of the operations against the Taipings, and whose name was inadvertently omitted in my recommendatory despatch; also of his first lieutenant, Lieutenant Grant. Commander Strode had the working of the naval 32-pounders on all occasions when they were used, and was assisted by Lieutenant Grant.—I have, &c., C. STAVELEY, Brigadier-general.

Commanding her Majesty's Troops in China.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

SIR CHARLES WOOD AT HALIFAX.

SIR CHARLES WOOD addressed his constituents at Halifax for two hours, and as the speech has made its appearance in every newspaper in the kingdom, we need not reprint it in our columns in extenso, to the exclusion of some portion of the Indian news just received. But the references to Sir Charles Wood's Indian policy are too important to be passed over in this paper. Sir Charles commenced his address with the customary allusions to the leading topics of the day as connected with Europe and America, and uttered no opinions that could give offence to any party, while he said much that was received with warm cheers. He touched on more tender ground when he defended his policy in his own particular department as Minister for India. There is no question that Sir Charles is unpopular in the East amongst the majority of his own countrymen there, but if that unpopularity has chiefly arisen from his adherence to the Benthamite doctrine of the greatest happiness of the greatest number he has not much reason to regret it, and when he appealed to a large British audience, sure to approve of fair play and justice, and told them that in the government of India it was not the welfare of 50,000 Europeans there that demanded his first consideration, but that of the 180,000,000 of natives, the sentiment was greeted with a generosity and earnestness of feeling in every way honourable to the national character. But in our unequivocal admiration of this policy we need not forget that it may be quite possible to reconcile the best interests of the natives with those of the European settlers, and that it is by no means necessary to associate a strict sense of duty and a correct policy with offensive harshness towards any class or individual. We must say, too, that full justice may be done to the natives without injuring the interests of the European indigo planters, or any other classes of our countrymen, who, while attending to their own individual interests, are improving the resources of the country.

We are glad to hear from Sir C. Wood that £12,000,000 would be this year expended upon public works in India. "When it had been found that there was, in consequence of some miscalculation, an excess of three millions in the Indian loan, and he had sent out directions that it could be applied to public works, the reply received from the local authorities was that every available labourer was employed daily on public works who could be properly superintended. There were 7,000 native workmen daily employed on public works." The passage in italics will only be understood by the initiated; but it, of course, reminds us of the dispute between Sir Charles Wood and Mr Laing. Sir Charles explained that his interference with Lord Canning's resolutions on the sale of land in India had reference chiefly to details. Instead of agreeing that the price of waste land should be fixed, he had insisted that the land should be put up to auction.

SALE OF WASTE LANDS IN INDIA.

THERE is a very long and elaborate article in the January number of Fraser's Magazine on the subject of the "Sale of Waste Lands and the Redemption of the Land-tax in India." The subject is in some respects rather difficult and perplexing, even to those who have well considered it and have some knowledge of the agricultural classes of India, and we should have supposed that in this country it would be "caviare to the general," and hardly fitted for the pages of a popular British periodical. However, it is at least a welcome indication that the vast importance of our Eastern possessions is beginning to be better understood than it used to be, when we find the editor of a work like that of Fraser's Magazine venturing to occupy sixteen double-columned closely-printed pages with such a subject, and to make it in position the leading paper of the number. The author of the article attaches to it the tri-initials J. H. B., and permits us to understand that he was the responsible Government agent for the Land Settlement in Berar for seven years, after the district had come under English management. He supports the views of Sir Charles Wood, and of course disapproves of the late Governor-general's Resolution, since so materially modified by a despatch from the Home Government. As it is likely, in consequence of this collision between the authorities in London and Calcutta, that the whole question may be very soon introduced into the British Parliament, it would be as well for our legislators to familiarize themselves with all that can be said on both sides on a matter so doubtful, debateable, and important. The writer in Fraser seems to think that the local rulers have favoured their own countrymen at the expense of the natives of India. In a Despatch, dated 31st December, 1858, from Lord Stanley, the then Home Minister for India, the Governor-general was emphatically warned that no exclusive favour should be shown to European settlers. "I particularly request," wrote Lord Stanley, "that in any suggestions or recommendations which you may submit to me, you will be especially careful not to confine them to such as may be calculated for the exclusive advantage of European settlers, and which cannot be equally participated in by the agricultural community generally;" and in a later Despatch, dated 16th March, 1859, there is an equal restriction of the power to favour our own countrymen, and a more careful and distinct recognition of the priority of claim in the soil held by the native inhabitants. We shall not on this occasion enter into the discussion, contenting ourselves with drawing attention to the article upon it in Fraser's Magazine. The writer seems alarmed at the idea of tampering with the landmarks of India, as the natives are so peculiarly jealous of all interference with their rights in the soil. Such a proceeding, he maintains, would be precisely the most critical danger to which our Government could expose itself, and all former Governments have recognized and avoided, he says, this rock of offence. We do not believe in any danger now from popular discontent in India. We have discovered that we cannot base the security of our rule in that country—at least for many long years to come—on moral influence alone. Our chief trust is in British muscle and British bravery. Captain Sword is at present in India a greater potentate than Captain Pen. But might is not right, and we should wish, for our own sakes as well as for the natives, to act fairly by them, and use our best endeavours to make them love as well as fear us, and gradually to make the love predominate over the fear, and render the latter a less essential element of our sovereignty.

Mr. Laing and many other politicians whose opinions are not to be treated with disrespect, deprecate with great earnestness the frequent interference of the home authorities with the representative of British power in the East, as having a tendency to perplex and humiliate the Local Government and lower its prestige with the natives. We are not at all disposed to dispute this position, and think that the Governor-general of India is sufficiently subject to all the necessary local checks to prevent his acting precipitately or with any serious danger in ordinary cases. But every great and vital question, obviously involving the interests of all India, and necessarily leading to vast changes in the general system of government, ought to be submitted to the decision of the Imperial Government. Though upon the whole it may fairly be argued that India should be governed in India, and the highest local authority should not be worried and weakened by petty interferences by a distant power necessarily less informed respecting local details, in all cases involving vast interests and vital principles, not imperatively demanding instant action, or admitting of delay without danger, it would assuredly be the wisest and safest course to leave the final decision to the Home Government.

MISCELLANEOUS.

APPOINTMENTS (Downing-street, Jan. 5).—The Queen has been pleased to appoint Robert Temple, Esq., to be Master of the Supreme Court of the Island of Mauritius.—(India Office, Jan. 8.) The Queen has been pleased to appoint Edward Parkyns Levinge, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, to be a Judge of the High Court at Fort William, in Bengal.

BRITISH OFFICERS IN THE SERVICE OF THE EMPEROR OF CHINA.—The Gazette of Tuesday night contains an Order in Council which, after referring to the permission given in August last to Captain Sherard Osborn and Horatio Nelson Lay to enter into the military and naval service of the Emperor of China, declares that it shall be lawful for all military officers in her Majesty's service to enter into the military service of the said Emperor, and to accept any commission, warrant, or other appointment under the said Emperor, and to accept any money, pay, or reward for their services. And that it shall be lawful for all officers in her Majesty's military service to serve the said Emperor in any military, warlike, or other operations, and for that purpose to go to any place or places beyond the seas, and to accept any commission, warrant, or other appointment from or under the said Emperor, and to accept any money, pay, or reward for their services. The licence and permission hereby given is to be in force only until September 1, 1864, unless extended by Order in Council.

PARTICULARS OF THE LOSS OF THE "COLOMBO."—By the Peninsula and Oriental Company's steamship Massilia we have received full particulars of the loss of the Colombo. Owing to the thickness of the weather, no observations could be taken after leaving Galle, and on the morning of November 19, at four o'clock, the weather continuing very thick, nothing being visible at a ship's length, and the rain coming down in torrents, speed was reduced to "full slow." Two hours afterwards breakers ahead were reported a quarter of a mile off, and before the engines, which were immediately reversed, could have any effect on the vessel, she forged ahead, and the swell and a strong wind drove her bodily on the coral beach. She touched so lightly that no one on board felt the shock. There was a strong current to the northward at the time of about three miles an hour. After striking she fell over to windward, exposing her deck to the sea, which poured down the hatchways and skylights in torrents. As nothing could be done to save the ship, the boats on the land side were cleared, and by eight a.m. all the passengers and crew were safely landed. A drenching rain continued all the time, which was the more felt as most of the ladies and children were very lightly clad. Awnings and spars were brought on shore, and by two p.m. the passengers were comfortably housed until better accommodation could be obtained at the village a short distance off, where they repaired the next day, and took up their abode, until the arrival of assistance. A native boat, with an officer, was sent to the nearest land, 210 miles distant, to telegraph the news of the disaster to Bombay, Galle, and Calcutta. An abundance of provisions was obtained from the wreck. On the 30th of November the Ottawa arrived from Bombay, and brought the passengers to Suez. Eighteen hours after striking the ship parted in two pieces midships. The disaster appears to have been occasioned by insufficient allowance having been made for the strength of the current, which, notwithstanding a mile and a half an hour had been allowed for it, drove the vessel some thirty two miles out of her course. The passengers speak in great praise for the presence of mind shown by Captain Farquhar under the trying circumstances, and his unwearied exertions for their comfort and convenience. A short time before the disaster Captain Farquhar had succeeded in saving a vessel from shipwreck.

DRAFTS ON INDIA.—The biddings for 60,00,000 rupees in bills on India took place on the 7th at the Bank of England. The proportions allotted were to Calcutta, 35,00,000 rs.; to Bombay, 20,50,000 rs.; and to Madras, 3,60,000 rs. The declared minimum price was as before—viz., 1s. 11½d. per rupee on Calcutta and 2s. on Bombay and Madras. The applications within the limits were for 180 lakhs. Tenders on Calcutta at 1s. 11½d. will receive about 45 per cent., and above that price in full; on Bombay all above 2s., and on Madras all at and above 2s. will receive in full.

SPECIM TO THE EAST.—The Massilia, which sailed on the 12th with the Bombay mails, took £59,978 in gold to Alexandria, and £21,527 in gold, and £198,075 in silver, to Bombay.

THE BREADALBANE PEERAGE.—The following caveat was lodged on Thursday last with the Sheriff Clerk of Chancery:—"Should a petition be presented by John Alexander Gavin Campbell, Esq., of Glenfalloch, or by any other party praying to be served nearest and lawful heir of tailzie and provision, or in any other character, to the Most Noble the Marquis of Breadalbane, who died on or about the 8th day of November last, the subscriber craves to be heard on behalf of Charles William Campbell, Esq., of the 10th Regiment of Bengal Cavalry, eldest son of the now deceased Charles William Campbell, Esq., formerly residing at Boreland, and thereafter at No. 11, Howard-place, Edinburgh, the nearest lawful heir to the title and estates of Breadalbane.—Henry Buchan, S.S.C. Edinburgh, 8th Jan., 1863." We understand this caveat is founded upon an allegation of illegitimacy against either the late Mr. Campbell of Glenfalloch or his son. Scotsman.

PLYMOUTH, Jan. 9.—The auxiliary steamer Golden Fleece, 2,768 tons, G. E. Bird, commander, belonging to the East India and London Shipping Company, passed and landed her pilot at 3 A.M. this morning. She had a full general cargo, and about ninety passengers, among whom were the following:—C. J. Watermeyer, Esq., J. C. Highton, Esq., Mr. and Mrs. Crighton and family, Mr. and Mrs. Murton and family, H. L. Murton, Esq., Mr. and Mrs. Darnell and family, Mr. Mansergh, Miss Coleridge, H. Jackson, Esq., Mr. Cloete, Capt. and Mrs. Gordon and family, &c., &c., for the Cape. Capt. and Mrs. Forster, Miss Montgomery, Miss Fitzgerald, Dr. A. F. Churchill, Staff-assistant Surgeons Nicholson, Elliott, McAdam, and Melbourne, Revs. Scott, Pears, Little, Hornby, Stephenson, Greenwood, and Godfrey, Lieut. Ward, P. Orr, Esq., Miss Clayton, &c., &c., for Madras. Capt. Paterson, Mr. and Mrs. Burton and family, Lieuts. Hay and Vandeleur, Ensigns Kellett and McMillan, Dr. Purefoy, Mr. and Mrs. Kettlewell, A. Brett, Esq., Mr. and Mrs. Nasle, Lieut. and Mrs. Tweedale, Capt. and Mrs. Baker, N. Ludlam, Esq., Mr. Baker, H. Gower, Esq., Lieut. and Mrs. McNamara, S. Collins, Esq., Mrs. Corbett and family, &c., &c., for Calcutta.

COLLISION IN SOUTHAMPTON WATER.—SOUTHAMPTON, JAN. 9.—The Peninsular and Oriental Company's steamship Ceylon, Captain Evans, with the heavy portion of the Bombay and Mauritius mails, arrived off the Needles at 5.30 this morning; she rounded Calshot Castle about 6.30, and was proceeding under easy steam up the Southampton Water when the look-out reported a ship a-head, in tow of a steam tug. The helm of the Ceylon was immediately ported and the engines reversed, to avoid, if possible, a collision; but the tug steamer having put her helm to starboard, came across the bows of the Ceylon, which struck the brig on the starboard side, and she sank immediately. The Rydesdale was bound from Southampton to Matanzas, with a cargo of coals and railway iron. The crew saved themselves by jumping on board the tug, but Capt. Reaper, commanding the brig, sustained considerable injury. The jibboom of the Ceylon carried away the funnel of the tug, which fell with a terrible crash on the deck, killing Goodridge, the pilot who was in charge of the brig. Robertson, another pilot in company with Goodridge, was severely injured; it is said both his legs are broken, one being dreadfully shattered. The fireman of the tug was drowned in the collision.

WASTE LANDS IN INDIA.—At a meeting of the Liverpool Chamber of Commerce on the 8th, a report was submitted to the effect that, having examined the documents, papers, and opinions on the subject, the committee thought it one upon which the Chamber possessed no special knowledge, but hoped it would receive the early and attentive consideration of Parliament. In the course of his remarks, Mr. Lawrence Heyworth regretted that the question had not been more actively pursued by the Chamber, as it was of the greatest importance to promote the productive industry of India by some rearrangements of land tenure. India contained 150 millions of people, who ought to consume ten times the amount of products from this country exported at present, but it would be impossible to achieve this result unless the tenure of land in India was made freehold. At present Government claimed a rental equivalent to 70 per cent. of the produce of the soil.

LORD ELGIN'S EXPECTED VISIT TO DELHI.

The Delhi Journal, alluding to Lord Elgin's expected visit, says no Governor-general has held a durbat at Delhi since the time of Lord Amherst, after which the King of Delhi protested against the Governor-general occupying a seat level with his own. Lord Ellenborough passed through Delhi, but the ex-king neither attended, nor was there an interchange of visits. Delhi was in disgrace when Lord Canning's progress through India was performed in 1859.

INDIA OUTFITS.—NOTICE.

Thresher's India Tweed Suits, Thresher's Kashmir Flannel Shirts, Thresher's India Gauze Waistcoats,

were invented and are manufactured exclusively by THRESHER and GLENNY, and for which the International Exhibition Medal of 1862; the Exhibition Medal of 1861; and the Madras Medal of 1856 have been awarded.—The high character and universal approval of these articles have led to a number of inferior imitations, all of which are advertised under similar, but triflingly altered names, and, therefore, Messrs. THRESHER and GLENNY feel it necessary to announce that the India Gauze Waistcoats, the Kashmir Flannel Shirts, and the India Tweed Suits can only be procured at their establishment,

MESSRS. WM. H. ALLEN AND CO.'S PUBLICATIONS.

AN INQUIRY into the THEORIES of HISTORY.—CHANCE, LAW, WILL, with Special Reference to the Principles of the Positive Philosophy. 8vo. cloth, 15s.

"This is both an able and an interesting book; for the writer, while an accurate and in some respects an original thinker, has also the command of a clear and animated style. The general scope of the book is the refutation of that naked positivism of which M. Comte is the apostle. . . . Of the whole work we can confidently say that it is one to be read by every man interested in these questions. It is a weighty treatise, and an important contribution to philosophy."—The Press, August 16, 1862.

"Written to combat certain opinions which have lately been gaining ground with some classes of thinkers, this treatise is well-timed. With no more boldness than is proper, the author claims that the views of wise men in former ages shall not be disregarded without good reason, and that nothing new and improved shall be accepted simply because of its impudence. His own language throughout is moderate and logical. A Conservative on principle, it is a part of his conservative belief in the steady progress of mankind to seek for the development of new thoughts in every age of human history, and ready to accept all that bears the stamp of truth. In a book full of argument, and occupying just that border-land of metaphysics which is harder to tread than the defined circle of metaphysics itself, it would be easy to discover discrepancies of thought and contradictions of terms; but the faults are few, and the merits many."—Examiner, Aug. 16, 1862.

A SHORT TRIP in HUNGARY and TRANSYLVANIA in the SPRING of 1862. By Professor D. T. ANSTED. Post 8vo., cloth, 8s. 6d.

"Professor Ansted's descriptions are written with a neatness attesting the accuracy of a scientific observer's eyes. His volume is one both of value and entertainment: a book calculated to turn the thoughts of tourists down the Danube."—Athenaeum, Aug. 16, 1862.

"Many a tourist this autumn will have cause to thank Professor Ansted for introducing them to a new and comparatively unknown country. . . . It would be difficult to find a more agreeable companion for a tour than the author of this interesting volume."—The Press, Aug. 9, 1862.

THE SCIENCE OF HOME LIFE.

By ALBERT J. BERNAYS, Professor of Chemistry and Natural Philosophy, and of Practical Chemistry at St. Thomas's Hospital Medical and Surgical College (late Lecturer on Chemistry and Practical Chemistry at St. Mary's Hospital), &c., &c. Illustrated by several cuts. Post 8vo., cloth, 6s.

MEMORABLE EVENTS of MODERN HISTORY. By J. G. EDGAR. Author of the "Bohemia of Great Men," &c., &c. With Illustrations. Post 8vo., cloth, 6s. 6d.

"A practical writer, with a high sense of his obligations as an instructor of children. Mr. J. G. Edgar never makes a contribution to juvenile literature that does not deserve a certain measure of commendation. We can conscientiously recommend it ('Memorable Events') as a work at the same time entertaining and useful."—Athenaeum, March 6, 1862.

"Mr. Edgar's style is clear, vigorous, simple, and unaffected, and from the first page to the last the reader is instinctively conscious of standing in the presence of a gentleman and a scholar. Though writing for the benefit of the rising generation Mr. Edgar possesses the enviable talent of attracting at the same time the attention of young men and grey-beards, and of so describing events as to suggest many a topic for grave reflection. His last ('Memorable Events') is certainly not his least work, and not only confirms but enhances his previous reputation as an earnest, agreeable, high-minded, and reliable chronicler of human achievements and human follies and failures."—Spectator.

"A most acceptable present for the youth of both sexes."—Observer.

THE FORESTS and GARDENS of SOUTH INDIA.

"Full of valuable information and thoroughly reliable in all its statements."—Daily News.

THE HISTORY of CHESS: from the Time of the Early Invention of the Game in India till the Period of its Establishment in Western and Central Europe. By DUNCAN FORBES, LL.D., 8vo., cloth, 15s.

"This volume will be a welcome addition to the library of every lover of the noble game of chess. Our author makes a stout fight for the Hindus as the inventors of the game, and adduces many cogent proofs in support of his opinion. He shows how the game is played in other countries, how it has been modified both in the names of the pieces and the names of the game by the peculiarities of the country or the national temperament of the inhabitants; and then traces the steps by which it has arrived at its present place of honour in civilised and intellectual Europe. The book is, therefore, full of curious lore that lean on other and higher subjects than chess-playing, for it involves dissertations on ethnology, comparative zoology, the dispersion and settlement of nations, and the manners and customs of different countries, to a degree that would not be at all anticipated by a person who contented himself by reading the title-page. All this information is given, not in any dry, repulsive, or even technical style, but easily, clearly, and in an animated manner—the style that would naturally be adopted by a gentleman and man of the world."—Herald.

SIN: its Causes and Consequences. An Attempt to Investigate the Origin, Nature, Extent, and Results of Moral Evil. A Series of Lent Lectures. By the Rev. HENRY CHRISTMAS, M.A., F.R.S. Post 8vo., cloth, 6s. 6d.

"These lectures are learned, eloquent, and earnest, and though they approach the 'limits of religious thought,' they do not transgress those limits; and they present the reader with a comprehensive review, based upon revelation, of the nature, extent, and consequences of moral evil or sin, both in this world and in the world to come."—Civil Service Gazette.

A COURSE of ELEMENTARY MATHEMATICS, for the Use of Candidates for Admission into either of the Military Colleges; of Applicants for Appointments in the Home or Indian Civil Service; and of Mathematical Students generally. 2nd Edition. In one closely printed 8vo. volume. Pp. 648. Price 12s.

"In the work before us he has digested a complete Elementary Course by aid of his long experience as a teacher and a writer; and he has produced a very useful book. . . . Mr. Young has not allowed his own tastes to rule the distribution, but has adjusted his parts with the skill of a veteran."—Athenaeum, March 9, 1861.

"Mr. Young is well-known as the author of undoubtedly the best treatise on the 'Theory of Equations' which is to be found in our language—a treatise distinguished by originality of thought, great learning, and admirable perspicuity. Nor are these qualities wanting in the work which we are reviewing. . . . Considering the difficulty of the task which Mr. Young has undertaken to discharge, and the extent of useful knowledge he has succeeded in imparting accurately and lucidly in so small a compass, we can without hesitation commend this work to the public as by far the best elementary course of mathematics in our language."—The London Review, April 6, 1861.

THE RUSSIANS AT HOME: Unpolitical

Sketches, showing what Newspapers they read; what Theatres they frequent; and how they Eat, Drink, and Enjoy themselves; with other matter relating chiefly to Literature, Music, and to Places of Historical and Religious Interest in and about Moscow. By SUTHERLAND EDWARDS, Esq. 2nd Edition, with Illustrations. Price 10s. 6d.

"It is a book that we can sincerely recommend, not only to those who are desirous of abundant and reliable information respecting the social economy of the Russian people, but to those who seek an entertaining volume, that may be perused in any part with both profit and amusement."—Edinburgh Evening Courant.

"This is not only one of the most amusing books that we have read for a long time, but also the best and most reliable account of Russian life and manners which has hitherto been given to the public."—Spectator.

"The tone is so genial the descriptions are so vigorously touched, and the author's perfect acquaintance with his subject is so marked throughout, that his sketches are sure to delight any one into whose hands they may fall."—Literary Gazette.

THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY of MISS CORNELIA KNIGHT, Lady Companion to the Princess

Charlotte of Wales, with Extracts from her Journals and Anecdote Books. Fourth Edition, 2 vols., 8vo., cloth, £1. 6s.

"Why we should turn to these volumes as among the most interesting of the recent season, will be sufficiently evident as we indicate their contents."—Times.

"Of the popularity of these volumes, on account of their historical as well as gossiping merits, there can be no doubt whatever."—Athenaeum.

THE HISTORY of the OPERA, from

MONTEBERDE to DONIZETTI. By SUTHERLAND EDWARDS. Second Edition, 2 vols., 8vo., cloth, price £1. 1s.

"Completely master of his subject, and possessing a ready and pleasing pen, Mr. Edwards in these volumes gives us an exceedingly interesting history of operatic performances."—Herald.

"It is one of those treasures of amusing anecdote that may be taken up and laid down at a minute's notice."—Times.

THE REPUBLIC of FOOLS: being the History of the State and People of Abdera in Thrace. Translated from the German of C. M. von Wieland. By the Rev. H. CHRISTMAS. 2 vols., post 8vo., cloth, 18s.

"As a prose satire, 'The History of the Abderites' yields only in breadth of humour, and pungency of wit, to Dean Swift's immortal travels of Captain Lemuel Gulliver, and of works of that class we know of none in any language that can compare with either of the two."—Observer.

"Here is enjoyment for many a Christmas to come, for many thousands of English boys, and many thousands of English men and women. Unfortunately for the world Plaisiratus Caxton departed this life without having made any contribution towards the great history of human folly, save, indeed, by the records of his own. Mr. Christmas has given us something even better in his translation of Wieland's Abderites; and in the simplest, most racy, and vernacular English, has enriched our literature with another character of the family dear to man-kind, of the Quixotes, Gullivers, and other human foils of human self-love and vanity. If the addition to our shelves of a book to delight the young and instruct the old overflowing with wit, fun, drollery, inexpressible wisdom, depth, and knowledge is an achievement deserving of national thanks, we undertake to convey our share to Mr. Christmas, fearing only lest we should not have thanked him sufficiently."—London Review.

FIRE! THIEVES!! FIRE!!!

C. H. GRIFFITHS having purchased nearly all the best quality of Fire-proof Safes from the International Exhibition of 1862, including those made by Messrs. Perry, Chatwood, Rhodes, and other eminent makers, is enabled to offer them at half the original cost. The patented improvements of the latter maker render it an impossibility for fire to take any effect under any circumstances of time and place. In consequence of the increasing demand for these essential and valuable repositories, which no house of business, or, indeed, private house (where plate, books, and documents are kept) should be without, in these hazardous and dangerous times, C. H. G. has taken additional premises, 3, Pentonville-road, where he also intends to keep opposite the Angel, Islington, where he also intends to keep a variety of Second-hand Safes by those eminent large makers, Milner, Price, Mordan, &c., at half the price of new. Sketches, with prices, free by post.

SARSAPARILLA.

WILKINSON'S (late BRIDGES) ESSENCE OF FLUID EXTRACT OF RED JAMAICA SARSAPARILLA is appreciated for its Purity, and marked superiority, daily prescribed by the Faculty for Impurities of the Blood, Affections of the Liver, Constitutional Debility, Attenuation of Body, as an Alternative Medicine at the Changes of the Seasons, and for freeing the system from the effects of Mercury.

In India and the Colonies it is extensively used to prevent taking complaints incidental to Tropical Climates, and as a renovator of the system after Sickness invaluable.

"A superior preparation, that may always be relied on."—Sir Astley Cooper.

"We are in every respect satisfied with it."—Lancet.

"We recommend your Sarsaparilla as the best."—Medical Review.

"Latterly, in consequence of much debility, &c., subsequent to Cholera, I have freely used 'Bridge's Sarsaparilla' myself, with complete benefit and success."—J. Poett, F.R.C.S.

Sold in pints, half-pints, and quarter pints. One pint is equal to eight pints of the ordinary preparations.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.—The public are cautioned against cheap preparations of Sarsaparilla, which, instead of being what they profess, are nothing but a decoction of common herbs, sweetened with molasses, and flavoured with American Winter Green. The genuine has "Thos. Wilkinson (late Bridge and Co.), 270, Regent-street, London," engraved on each bottle.

AGREEABLE SEIDLITZ POWDER in one bottle, protected by a case with measure and spoon included. This preparation is highly recommended, not only as a Mild Aperient, but to allay Fever, Thirst, &c.

AROMATIC TINCTURE OF QUINIDINE for the prevention of Fever, Intermittent or Remittent Ague, and other effects of Malaria. No person exposed to the influence of or predisposing cause of Fevers should be without it, for if taken in small doses daily the system will become so thoroughly impregnated with its principles as to be rendered proof against all attacks of Contagion or Malaria. Sold in pints, half-pints, and quarter-pints.

The above articles prepared only by Thos. Wilkinson (late Wilkinson, Bridge, & Co.), 270, Regent-street, London, W.

To prevent spurious imitations, please to observe that the words "KEATING'S COUGH LOZENGES" are engraven on the Government Stamp of each Box, without which none are genuine.

KEATING'S COUGH LOZENGES.

JUDGED BY THE IMMENSE DEMAND,
THIS UNIVERSAL REMEDY now stands the first in public favour and confidence; this result has been acquired by the test of fifty years' experience. These Lozenges may be found on sale in every British Colony, and throughout India and China they have been highly esteemed wherever introduced. For COUGHS, ASTHMA, and all affections of the Throat and Chest, they are the most agreeable and efficacious remedy. Prepared and sold in Boxes, Tins, and Bottles of various sizes by THOMAS KEATING, Chemist, &c., 79, St. Paul's Churchyard, London. Sold retail by all Druggists and Patent Medicine Vendors in the World.

PRICHARD'S AROMATIC STEEL PILLS

stand unequalled for restoring vigour to weak and relaxed constitutions, and have been proved to be the best medicine ever offered to the public. To those who are suffering from languor and exhaustion occasioned by a residence in hot climates, these Pills will be found particularly beneficial. They give energy to the muscles and nerves, strength to the stomach, and completely renovate the system, so that the patient is astonished at the effects produced.

Prepared by W. PRICHARD, Apothecary, 65, Charing-cross, London. In boxes 1s. 1d., 2s. 6d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. May be had of all Medicine Vendors.

MR. HOWARD, Surgeon-Dentist, 52, Fleet-

street, has introduced an entirely new description of ARTIFICIAL TEETH, fixed without springs, wires, or ligatures. They so perfectly resemble the natural teeth as not to be distinguished from the originals by the closest observer. They will never change colour or decay, and will be found superior to any teeth ever before used. This method does not require the extraction of roots, or any painful operation, will support and preserve teeth that are loose, and is guaranteed to restore articulation and mastication. Decayed teeth stopped, and rendered sound and useful in mastication. 52, Fleet-street. At home from Ten till Five.

KEATING'S PERSIAN INSECT POWDER.

UNRIVALLED in EXTERMINATING
Mosquitoes, Fleas, Bugs, Flies, Beetles, Cockroaches, and every description of insect infesting Animals and Poultry, protects Clothes, &c., from Moths. ONLY INJURIOUS TO INSECT LIFE. See that the name of THOMAS KEATING, 79, St. Paul's Churchyard, is on every Packet.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT AND PILLS.

RHEUMATISM, NEURALGIA.—It is sometimes difficult to determine which of these diseases is afflicting the sufferer; to this ignorance will not matter if Holloway's remedies be used. They alleviate and cure all muscular and nervous pains. In hereditary rheumatism, after bathing the affected parts in warm salt and water, Holloway's Ointment should be well rubbed upon the spot, that it may penetrate and exert its soothing and regulating properties on the deeper vessels and nerves, which are unduly excited and cause both the pain and swelling. Holloway's treatment has the merit of removing the disease without debilitating the constitution, which is the inevitable result of the bleeding, mercury, and colchicum practice, formerly adopted in these complaints.

ROBERT GORDON LATHAM, M.A., M.D., F.R.S., &c.

The Illustrations drawn on Wood expressly for the Work, by PAUL J. NAFTEL, Member of the London Society of Painters in Water Colours.

"The 'Channel Islands' is an excellent book of its class—well conceived, well written, well illustrated, well printed. It is the produce of many hands, and every hand a good one. Nearly every thing which a man can desire to know about Jersey, Guernsey, Alderney, and Sark—about their history, Geography, and natural history—Professor Ansted and Dr. Latham have contrived to tell. Altogether the contents of the volume are as varied and interesting as a well-sustained drama; and to this drama no more graceful and picturesque scenery could have been furnished than we find in the illustrations so profusely given by artists worthy of the subject and equal to their worth—Paul Nafel and M. Peters Le Lièvre. The result is not a merely handsome volume of the old 'Keepsake' style, made to sell and be looked at, but a book of rare merit and value, made for instruction and delight, to be read with pleasure and to be referred to with profit."—Athenaeum, Nov. 15, 1862.

MAILS TO INDIA.

Mails to India and China, via Marseilles, are despatched from London as follows, viz.:—Those for Bombay packets, on the evening of the 3rd and 18th of each month; and those for Calcutta packets (including mails for Ceylon, Madras, and China), on the evenings of the 10th and 26th of each month. When any of these dates falls on a Sunday, the mails are made up on the following evening.

Letters and Newspapers can be forwarded to any part of India, via Bombay and Marseilles, and in most cases will reach their destination some days sooner than if despatched by the following Calcutta mail. The Bombay mails via Southampton, however, are no longer available for the transmission of Letters or Newspapers to the Madras Presidency.

Mails for the Mediterranean and all parts of India and China, except the Bombay Presidency, are despatched via Southampton on the mornings of the 4th and 20th, or, when either of these dates falls on Sunday, upon the previous evening.

Mails for the Mediterranean, the Presidency of Bombay, and Upper or North-West Provinces of Bengal and China, are despatched via Southampton on the 12th and 27th of the month, except when these dates fall on Sunday, in which case they are forwarded on the previous evening.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

SIR CHARLES TREVELYAN promises to be the most popular man in India, and after the cloud that fell upon him as Governor of Madras all this sunshine must be very delightful to him. While people in India are still talking of the recall of Sir Hugh Rose, which is an extremely improbable event, there are all sorts of rumours of Sir Charles Trevelyan's brightening prospects. Every paper in India has alluded to the report that, in the event of Lord Elgin's retirement, Sir Charles is to succeed as Governor-General of India. As Lord Bentinck jumped from the Government of Madras to that of all India it is just possible that Sir Charles Trevelyan may have similar good fortune, and may at this moment, for aught we know, have the provisional appointment in his pocket. It is thought, however, more likely that he will pass from his financial task to the Government of the North-Western Provinces, and then, perhaps, eventually, become the chief Potentate of our Indian Empire.

The Indian newspapers insert canards of all sorts, without much consideration. There are generally so few topics of a sensation character at their command that they are glad to catch at any gossip or rumour, however much it may "want confirmation," the smallest donations being thankfully received. One of the papers states it as a fact that the Viceroy's office establishment has left Calcutta for Simla, and that it is "fully prepared for a two year's stay at Simla." We doubt this much. It is almost as difficult to govern India from the Himalayah mountains as from Victoria-street, in Westminster, and we hope Lord Elgin's health will be such as to save him from the necessity of a very prolonged absence from the seat of Government.

There is a rumour, which has found its way into the English papers, that Sir Charles Wood is very soon to be elevated to the peerage. Perhaps there is some truth in this. We believe that in the event of Sir Charles passing to the Upper House he will not cease to be Minister for India. People are already speculating as to the gentleman who is likely to succeed Sir Charles as member for Halifax. Colonel Akroyd is said to have the best chance of success, should he consent to be brought forward as a candidate.

We call the attention of all who are in any way, directly or indirectly, interested, to the General Orders in another column respecting the settlement of accounts of the Saddle Contract Fund at Madras, and the appropriation of the shares. We may congratulate the parties immediately interested, who, perhaps, will content themselves with exclaiming, "Better late than never."

In consequence of the unsettled state of affairs in Rajpootana, the Commander-in-chief has placed a field force at the disposal of the Political Agent there.

It will be seen amongst our extracts from the latest papers from India that Mr. G. U. Yule, of the Bengal Civil Service, has been appointed to the residency of Hyderabad, in succession to Colonel Davidson. The appointment has met with universal approbation. Mr. Yule is precisely the sort of man best fitted to support the British name and authority at the capital and court of the Nizam. He is an energetic and most intelligent and honourable public servant. The Bengal Civil Service could hardly have supplied a better man.

The restless and energetic Ameer Dost Mahommed Khan has resolved to besiege Herat. Sultan Jan is said to have been deserted by some of his own troops. Herat is provisioned for a year.

The Breach of Contract Bill has been withdrawn from the Calcutta Legislative Council.

A commercial treaty has been concluded with the King of Ava by the Government of India for the passage through his territory, duty free, of all merchandize to and from British Burmah and China.

The Royal Warrants, authorising the distribution of prize property captured at Dhar, Nurgood, Shorapore, Hulgullee, and in Khandeish during the mutiny, have been published in the Government Gazette of the 18th of December. The booty taken at Dhar on the 2nd of November, 1857, has realised the sum of £77,000 sterling; whilst for that captured at Nurgood, Shorapore, Hulgullee, and in Khandeish the sums realised are £1,000, £6,830, £490, and £10,700.

The Englishman of the 18th of December announces a great improvement in the piece goods market of Calcutta. "Light goods have risen more, in consequence of their scarcity in the market, and heavy qualities, from their abundance, being less sought for."

All interested in the improvement of the character of the people of India, and who are desirous that they should be fitted to take a share in the government of the country, will be grieved to read the account, which we have given in another column, of the conduct of the Rajah of Doornraon. The natives have been too long accustomed to believe that justice is an article to be bought and sold, and that men in great positions can over-awe any minister of justice, of a lower rank, socially. And it is but too true that native witnesses are to be obtained by thousands for a few annas each; but our English judges in India are known to be sagacious and incorruptible, and even our sudder aumeens and native deputy magistrates and dorgahs are far more trustworthy than they used to be. It appears that Messrs. Burns and Co., the railway contractors, purchased timber from the Rajah's estates to the value, as they say and as they very satisfactorily prove, of about 11,000 rupees. But when the wood had been all cut and used the Rajah made a claim of nearly four lacs! The English traders produced their accounts and memoranda, while the Rajah had not a single written document, but trusted entirely to the evidence of five hundred of his own dependents. The case was tried by one of his own countrymen, the principal Sudder Ameer of Shahabad, and the Rajah failed most ignominiously, in spite of petty bribery and wholesale falsehood. We second the Englishman in the expression of a hope that this Oriental nobleman will not be received by Lord Elgin and other high British functionaries with the usual official marks of respect lavished on wealthy and titled natives.

The Legislative Council met at Calcutta on the 17th of December, when all the members were present, it being considered an occasion of more than ordinary interest, as his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-general had to move that a report of the Select Committee appointed to alter or amend the rules for the conduct of business in that Council should be taken into consideration. His Excellency, before putting the motion to the vote, entered into an explanation of great length respecting certain misconceptions on the part of the public as to the nature of the proposed changes, which, it seems, had been viewed with much suspicion, some persons affecting to believe that they were part of a settled design on the part of the Secretary of State and the Governor-general to deprive the Council of its prerogatives. One of the rules of Council was that no Bill should become law until it had been notified to the public for three months, so that all India should hear of it, and have time to appeal against it. Lord Elgin approved of this as a general regulation, but thought that emergent occasions might arise when it would be both inconvenient and dangerous to submit a Bill to so long a delay.—It was proposed in special cases that the Governor-general should be substituted for the Governor-general in Council; that the Governor-general should have the power of giving immediate effect on his sole authority to such measures of legislation as had been passed by the Council. The removal of the word "session" had also been objected to as a part of the same supposed conspiracy. His Excellency's motion was then put, and carried without opposition.

At the same meeting of Council the contract law was discussed. Some of the members were very much inclined to retain the Bill, and complained that the Secretary of State had exercised too much control over their deliberations, by which he rendered them almost useless. They thought a contract law of some kind was absolutely necessary for the protection of those who embark capital or supply labour for the promotion or development of the industrial interests of India.—The Lieut.-governor still adhered to his original opinion that the Bill was desirable.—The President said that he had listened with very great attention to all that fell from the different members, and he should consider himself guilty of serious indiscretion if he treated any general measure as that which they were considering until he saw his way clear through it. He could not concur in all that had been said, but there was a great deal which met with his entire acquiescence. They must, however, be very cautious when they proceeded to depart from the line of demarcation between criminal and civil law. Very strong proof must be brought forward to justify their dealing with a person criminally for the breaking of a contract, which was always treated in the nature of a wrong. Adverting to all this, he was not prepared to say that he was in favour of a measure of the kind.—After a few remarks from Mr. Maine, the motion for the withdrawal of the Bill was put and carried.

The French monthly mail steamer to the East, which sailed yesterday from Marseilles, took out £340,000 in specie. It is believed that the requirements in this respect for the French expedition in Cochin China are large and continuous.

CAIRO, Jan. 19.

The obsequies of his Highness Said Pasha, the late Viceroy of Egypt, were celebrated yesterday. A great concourse was present at the ceremony.

Ismail Pasha has taken possession of the Citadel, and received the authorities. Public opinion is very favourable to the new Viceroy. All the foreign consuls and the Turkish authorities have arrived here from Alexandria. They were immediately received by Ismail Pasha.

THE WRECKED "COLOMBO."

Captain Black has received further news from the Colombo at Minicoy. It appears that Capt. Farquhar has succeeded in saving the whole of the mails, baggage, and cargo, and was endeavouring to get up as much of the ship's stores as possible.

The following are the particulars of the wreck of the P. and O. Company's steamer Colombo, as given in a letter of a passenger, received here yesterday, and dated Minicoy Island, Nov. 20:—

"We left Galle harbour all right at two o'clock in the afternoon of Monday, the 17th, and when we cleared the land the steamer was laid on her course to run through the Nine Degrees Channel, which, as I daresay you know, has the Laccadive Islands on the north and Minicoy Island on the South, dividing it from the Eight Degrees Channel. The weather when we left Galle was dirty, wet, and boisterous, with a high sea running, and continued so that night and all Tuesday, inasmuch that we got no observation of the sun on the latter day, and the ship must have been running mainly by dead-reckoning with, as afterwards turned out, a strong current setting to the south-west and seriously influencing the steamer's course. All appeared to be going on well when we went to bed on Tuesday night, and I believe that no alarm or suspicion of danger was entertained; but shortly after I awoke and rose on Wednesday morning I perceived that the ship's way was stopped, and I missed the thrill and the dull noise of the screw. At first I naturally imagined that the steamer had only been hove to as a matter of precaution on account of the foul weather through which we had been running or to take soundings with the deep sea lead, and thought little of the stoppage and the silence; but on looking out of my cabin port I saw land close to us, and immediately after the ship struck with a shock that vibrated through her. There was now no longer any doubt as to what had occurred, and after the first alarm and questionings had passed away, the passengers, clothing themselves with the best and readiest things they could find, came upon deck, and we saw the Island of Minicoy close aboard, with a heavy sea running, and breakers along the shore. We were on a reef at some distance from the island on the north side; and when we got on deck the steamer began to roll and labour in such a way that it was impossible to stand on the deck without a firm hold of something, and to move was attended with considerable danger. The captain and officers of the Colombo behaved, under the serious and trying circumstances, with the greatest coolness, composure and presence of mind, and as it was obvious from the fearful manner in which the vessel rolled and strained that her last voyage was run, and that it was time to look to the safety of the passengers and crew, the order was given to clear and lower away the boats, so as to land them on the island. The first boat which made the shore took with her a hawser, one end of which remaining fast in the ship, and the other being towed ashore and there also fastened, communication with the island was thus established. The ladies and children were, of course, first looked to, and though the frightful rolling of the ship made their transfer to the boats a matter of considerable difficulty, danger, and delay, the first boat was safely freighted, and made the shore by hauling on the hawser hand by hand. The second boat, also with ladies and children, was not so fortunate, for the man who was pulling her towards the shore having somehow let go or missed the hawser the boat got adrift, and might actually have been washed out to sea and lost had not the tide or current fortunately waited her back to the wreck, where, recommencing her attempt, she at length reached the shore. In this manner all the passengers and those whose exertions on board the ship were not required, reached the island, but there being no beach and the water being deep, all those who landed were thoroughly drenched, the ladies having been landed from the boats by the sailors, without whose aid they must have been drowned. The rain also was pouring heavily all the morning, and what between the sea and the clouds the rescued passengers had but a sorry time of it, and looked miserable enough. Yesterday, however, some food and wine were got ashore for them, which they ate in huts on the shore near the scene of the wreck; and to-day their discomforts were still further alleviated. To-morrow it is intended to remove the ladies and children to a pukka European-built house, which, we hear, is on the other side of the island, and which I believe was built for, and is used by, the Government Collector in his annual revenue tours in this and the neighbouring island. We have saved almost all our personal baggage which we had with us in our cabins when the ship struck; but of course all that was in the hold or baggage-room is gone, and what we have is drenched with sea water and rain. The unfortunate Colombo is a total wreck and irretrievably lost; and the only wonder on my part before leaving the ship was that, on such a reef, with such a sea running, and labouring as she did, she did not break up before we left her. This letter, which is written in a hut on the shore, and under many difficulties, will give you pretty correctly an account of the main incidents of the wreck; but, of course, as to the causes which led to it, or the precautions by which it might have been avoided, I know nothing, beyond the thick, dirty weather, and the absence of solar observation the day before the catastrophe. As far as I could observe, after the ship struck, every one behaved well; and I suppose that if anything could have been done to save her it was done; but, to the seeing of every one on board, her deliverance was utterly hopeless from the moment she first grated on the reef. This goes by a boat about to leave, with the announcement and some of the particulars of our disaster, for Cochin on the Malabar coast, whence I hear you will learn the news of the wreck by telegraph in Calcutta long before a letter could reach you."

Since the above was in type we have been favoured with the following official account of the catastrophe.

Extract of a letter from Captain A. B. Farquhar, commander of the steam-ship Colombo, dated Minicoy, 21st November:—

"I left Galle on 17th at 2 P.M., with a fresh E. S. E. breeze and partial cloudy weather; at noon on 18th obtained no sights for latitude, but got a sight for longitude. In the morning, in working out the ship's position for noon of that day, I allowed for a current to W. N. W. 30 miles in 21 hours and a half.—Course steered W. by N. by compass var. 1 E. making Minicoy to bear N. 66°, W. 194 miles. The weather continued thick, with heavy continuous rain all the afternoon and night of 18th; no stellar observation being obtainable. Wind E. S. E., squally and variable to S. E.; at times moderate breeze; under plain sail. During the first watch the wind was variable at S. to S. W., moderate with heavy incessant rain. About 3.45 A.M. 19th, the wind veered to E. by S., with blinding heavy rain; wind light. At 4.30 A.M., owing to the thick rain, I ordered the engines to be eased down dead slow, being uncertain as to the actual set of the current, but not anticipating that the ship was near the Islands, the position by dead-reckoning being lat. 7.44 N., long. 72.55 E., Minicoy bearing N. 14, E. 34.

"From 5 A.M. to 6.20 it rained in torrents and as thick as a hedge, ship going dead slow about 4 knots; wind E. S. E. At 6.25 the rain held up for an instant; saw land right ahead, stopped engines and ordered to be reversed full speed, ship being then about one-third mile off the land. At 6.35 ship touched forward; there being a heavy swell at the time from Eastward, the ship tailed round and struck on starboard bilge, engines going astern full speed. At 6.40 ship rolled to windward and struck heavily on port bilge, causing the water to flow into boiler-room rapidly; stopped the engines, the ship being broadside on the reef and not removeable. Blew steam off and cleared away boats to land passengers. At 8 A.M. all passengers landed safely. Commenced landing spars and sails to rig tents for ladies and children. The surf was running high at the time and the ship was falling to windward, the port life-boat was stove at the devils, and the first cutter was washed away and subsequently stove on the beach. About 9 A.M. the tide began to fall and the ship settled firmly on the ground and remained tolerably quiet. We landed all stores, and provisions and mails that could be got at handily, with live-stock, &c., in event of the ship breaking up suddenly.

"About noon, 19th, it was blowing a fresh gale with heavy rain. During the afternoon the ship began to bump heavily, but up to six P.M. very little signs of weakness; masts all standing firmly. At 6 P.M. I landed all the crew and left the ship for the night in case of her breaking up during the night. About 10 P.M. the swell increased, and we could hear the iron plates amidships cracking, and at 2 A.M. 20th, she parted at the foremost watertight bulkhead of the boiler-room, and at daylight the forward part had moved off two feet from the after; 20th, we went to work, saving all passengers' baggage that could be reached; all the cabins on port side were under water, the sea making a clean breach over all down the skylights and hatchways. During this day the sea moderated, and we have succeeded in saving a quantity of baggage, all the specie out of the bullion room, and about twenty bales of silk; and if the wind and sea keep moderate I hope to be able to recover all the silk and a portion of baggage out of the forehold, but I am afraid the indigo will be all lost, from the position of the forward part of the wreck being so much exposed to the sea, rendering it very dangerous to life attempting to enter the fore lower hold.

"I am thankful to say the passengers are all well and tolerably comfortably located for the time, the natives of the island being most hospitable and willing to assist in every way. The head man having placed a boat at my disposal, I intend despatching this with telegrams at once in charge of an officer and quartermaster.

"I am happy to say all the officers and crew have exerted themselves to the utmost in rendering assistance.

"The only way in which I can account for this melancholy accident is the probable existence of a cyclone to the southward, causing the extraordinary northing current.

"The portion of mail saved is entirely Australian. The Calcutta, Madras, and China mail is under water yet.

"(Signed) ALEX. B. FARQUHAR,
"Commander S. S. Colombo."
—Englishman, Dec. 12.

It is expected that all the cargo of the ill-fated Colombo will be recovered, though the greater portion will be quite valueless. A number of divers are engaged on the spot, and we hear that the Azof is to bring all that may be recovered to Galle, when full particulars regarding the casualty may be looked for.

The Azof arrived at Galle at eight A.M. to-day from Minicoy; as yet we have no particulars of news brought by her.

From intelligence received this morning we learn that there is no news of importance by the Azof from the wreck. She has brought about 350 boxes of silk and 150 boxes mails. The Nemesis, which took our last Overland mail, called off the island and landed one European diver sent by the P. and O. agent at Galle; she also took on 140 boxes mails which had been saved. The Azof will not return to Minicoy before the 15th, owing to arrangements to be made with the Bombay authorities.

We hear that Captain Farquhar is considered one of the P. and O. Co.'s best and most energetic men. He has been on this line for about fifteen years—five or six of which he has had commands. The passengers of the Colombo, before leaving Minicoy in the Ottawa, presented him with a letter, in which they expressed their satisfaction with his behaviour, and especially thanking him for the unremitting attention paid to them, and the exertions made for their comfort, since the catastrophe took place.—Colombo Observer.

THE RAJAH OF DOOMRAON.

A striking illustration of the entire unscrupulousness of the native character in the somewhat grave matter of honesty and truth, has been lately exhibited in the court of the Principal Sudder Ameen of Shahabad. The Rajah of Doomraon, an old gentleman of immense wealth and ancient family, but who, since 1857, has been principally known for his very questionable conduct during those troublous days, and who narrowly escaped the penalty of the disloyal, lately brought an action against Messrs. Burn and Co., the great railway contractors, in which he claimed a sum amounting to nearly four lacs of rupees, the alleged price of fire-wood cut on his estates. Burn and Co. admitted only about 11,000 rupees. On the trial it was clearly proved by overwhelming and unanswerable evidence that the accounts of Messrs. Burn and Co. were correct; that the wood was priced at so much per hundred maunds, the mode of calculation prevalent throughout that and the neighbouring districts, and sanctioned by the Rajah himself. The Rajah, on the other hand, averred that specific agreements had been made for each separate tree, on which a price had been fixed before it was cut. To substantiate this averment he produced, not accounts or written documents, not even a scrap of paper, nor the evidence of one respectable or independent man, but he brought to the court no less than five hundred of his dependent ryots to repeat like parrots the absurd and improbable tale which he had put into their subservient mouths! Fortunately, the principal Sudder Ameen, unlike the generality of his judicious compeers, examined these veracious gentlemen himself, instead of handing them over to the hole-and-corner mohurrirs. Thus examining them, he at once detected the thorough falseness of their statements; the evidence of the "five hundred" was set aside as worthless, and Maharajah Rajah's case ignominiously broke down, the court recording that the evidence was obviously tutored.

It is significant to observe the wholesale character of the iniquity here displayed, and the shamelessness with which a man in the position and circumstances of the Doomraon Rajah thus parades his bad faith in the broad glare of a court of justice. It is significant, because it shows the confidence which rich men place in the power which their wealth gives them in litigation. It is confidently asserted that the Rajah fully anticipated a triumph; that bribes to a large amount were distributed among amlah, witnesses, and vakils, and attempts even made to corrupt some of the European witnesses of Messrs. Burn and Co. No one in any other portion of the globe would have dreamed of establishing a case by such outrageous means, and certainly, save in India, no man of respectability, rank, and opulence would so recklessly sacrifice his reputation and name. Had the principal Sudder Ameen done his duty impartially, he would have committed both Rajah and witnesses to the criminal court.

We are curious to see whether the Government, which professes to educate its native subjects, will continue to do honour to a man who thus sets all probity and honour at defiance. If the Lieut.-Governor, or the Governor-General would once awaken to a due appreciation of his responsibility in such matters, and exercise the vast powers for good which each possesses—if either one or the other would but occasionally mark his sense of immorality and crime, when publicly exhibited and judicially proved, the effect would be beyond all calculation beneficial. Till this is done the schoolmasters may teach and professors lecture till the brain is dizzy and the throat is dry, but teaching and lectures will be vain. The forger still sits on the Education Committee at Patna, and the leader of the "five hundred" of Shahabad will receive utter and pawn at the hands of the ruler of the land on the occasion of the next durbar.—Englishman.

MR. TEMPLE'S DURBAR.

SAUGOR, CENTRAL PROVINCES, Dec. 7.—A durbar was held by Mr. Temple on Friday, the 20th ult., at half-past 3 P.M., to receive the European and native community of Saugor. All the native princes, nobility, and gentry of the district were present, together with a large collection of the military and civil gentlemen of the station, making an assembly of about five hundred persons. Two large tents joined together formed the durbar tent, under which two long parallel rows of chairs were placed. On one of these rows sat the native nobility of Saugor, and on the other, directly fronting it, the European gentry, in the middle of whom sat Mr. Temple, supported on his right by Brigadier Travers, and on his left by the Commissioner, Mr. Campbell. At a little after half-past 3 P.M. the great man was seen in the distance coming towards the tents, accompanied by his assistant, Surgeon Major Rivett Carnac, and followed by a dozen or so troopers. At the durbar tent he was received by a flourish of trumpets, and a whole regiment of the police presented arms in various parts of the camp. All this was very pretty. The chief alighted and shook hands with all who were near him. He seated himself in the centre of the nearest row of chairs directly facing the natives, who were all presently one by one brought up, according to their rank and standing, by Captain Newmarch, and introduced to the Chief Commissioner; the virtue, loyalty, and other particulars relative to each being communicated at the same time by the introducer. Mr. Temple spoke a few kind words to each. The monotony of the presentations was varied by Pundit Pujlosheer, of the Saugor College, reading, on his presentation, an ode in Sanscrit verse, describing Mr. Temple to be the sun for whose glorious visit to Saugor people had waited with the same pleasureable hope that the appearance of the natural sun is looked forward to after the darkness of night, and that even the packshees (birds) under his Government enjoyed life, sans souci, and sitting on trees sang his praises. The ode was highly amusing, from its being written in the florid oriental style.

The presentations being over, Mr. Temple rose, and, calling the native princes nearer to him, delivered with his own hand letters of their appointment to the new native honorary magistracies, giving them some advice as to the performance of their duties, enjoining them to be honest, just, and severely upright, and act as magbap to their dependents in the same way as the Government had acted towards them—to refrain from oppression, corruption, and indolence. To all others he advised the improvement of their villages, the rearing and planting of shrubs, plants, and forest trees; the digging of wells and tanks, the making of roads, the fostering and promoting of schools and hospitals, and behaving kindly and generously by their ryots, giving the latter tuccavee to buy seeds and bullocks, even as the Government gives the landlords tuccavee. "Show me," said he, "the village whence the ryots run away, and I will tell you what sort of a landlord that village has." His speech lasted for an hour and a-half, and was listened to with the greatest attention: it must produce good fruit. No chief commissioner ever before had come among them like this, and spoken to them like their magbap, exclaimed the natives after the durbar.

But the incident which pleased them most, even as much as his speech, was his checking his attendants, who were driving away a native who had already heard the speech of Mr. Temple at the durbar, and approached to say his complaint. "Let every man," said he, "approach me freely, and forbid him not; for this reason have I come to Saugor." This has endeared him to the natives tenfold, and the incident is mentioned from mouth to mouth. After the durbar Mr. Temple remained for some time, walking about the grounds and shaking hands with all those whom he recognised.

On Saturday he rode up to the volunteers of Saugor while at drill, and congratulated them on their appearance. From the drill ground he went to the native town, where he suggested various improvements, which are to take place. Mr. Temple comes in from Nowgong on Monday morning, the 8th inst., when another grand durbar is to take place, at which all the Malgozars, about 600, are to be presented, and the Saugor College, containing about 300 pupils, is to be examined and presented with prizes. Surely education ought to flourish in Central India under such a warm and energetic friend as Mr. Temple undoubtedly is. Captain Browne, the new Deputy Commissioner, arrived this morning from Naggore. Captain Newmarch goes to Nursingapore as officiating Deputy Commissioner, in place of Capt. Gordon, who superintends the revenue settlement of the district. Lieutenant Ducat left some days ago for Hoshungabad, whence Gordon, of the 28th N.I., goes to Dumoh to act as Deputy Commissioner, while Captain Maclean manages the settlements.

BREACHES OF CONTRACT BILL.

We regret to have to announce that in the Council of the Governor-general for making laws and regulations, the Bill relating to breaches of contract committed in bad faith finished its career with a report, Mr. Maine acting as undertaker on the occasion. Considering the vicissitudes this Bill has seen, and the manner in which it has been treated, it is, perhaps, better that it has been decently shelved in silence than that it should have suffered further indignities. We have assumed that the Bill has been so disposed of, as neither the honourable gentlemen nor the members of the jury—we beg their pardon, committee—who sat upon the inquest, had a word to say upon the subject, except the usual "I beg leave, my Lord, to present the report, &c." If we are correct in our supposition, there has been a breach of faith somewhere between the Governor-general in Council and the public. We are quite aware that Sir Charles Wood refused to allow the Bill to pass in its original shape; but surely that was no reason why it should not have been so amended as to meet some, if not all, of his objections. It looks very much as if the Maharajah had given orders for the subject to be burked, prohibiting its revival in any shape. We suppose that, according to usage, the report will be published, when we hope to find ourselves mistaken in our conjectures. We know it is of little use appealing either to the ordinary, extraordinary, or additional members of the council for aid in such matters. Under the new rules they are only consultative members, and are practically powerless to originate or even protest against any measure whatever.

We have avoided reference to the cock-and-bull story in the Friend of India of last week, respecting an outbreak of "political importance" in Nowgong. There was a suspicious tremor about his account, and a want of proper sequence in the connection of the affair with poor Singer's murder that gave it the appearance of having been written by some one with nerves unstrung, and therefore not exactly reliable in his reasoning upon the facts of the sensational occurrence. Our later information justifies our reticence. The affair has just the same political significance as has the running a-mok of a Moslem or a Malay, wherever Moslem or Malay is to be found. The truth appears to be that three men—a Mussulman, a doom, and a mooche—of the detachment stationed at Nowgong, were met by a man named Helooa and the kagoti of Baligaon, who were coming up from bathing in the river there, and without provocation cut down Helooa with an axe, and attacked the kagoti also, though without serious effect. They then proceeded to burn down the house of one Paddo, doom, and carried off a woman, who was said to have been given to the said Paddo, though be-throated already to one of the three assailants. An exaggerated account of the outrage reached the Officiating Deputy Commissioner of Nowgong, Mr. Brownlow, who sent some burkundazes to seize the fakir who was reported to have committed the outrage. After some days, however, he learned that several other fakirs had joined the originators of the disturbance and had resolved to defend the house in which they with the abducted woman had shut themselves up. Mr. Brownlow then, in company with Dr. French, Mr. O'Connor, and Mr. Phillips, and with a guard of ten sepoy, surrounded the house, and called on the men to surrender. Three men came out, evidently drugged, and rushed upon the party in desperation, but were shot down without serious injury to any one. The woman escaped, also showing vigorous fight, and what became of the remaining men, if there really were any more, we have not learned. It is asserted that the ruffians were the disciples of a Gosain, who had assured them that the British rule was at an end, and they themselves invulnerable, the one assurance being as effectual as the other, against the sepoy's musket balls. The whole affair seems to be really nothing more than a row among themselves of savages inflamed by jealousy and then maddened by bhang.

If the delay in appointing a successor to Colonel Davidson at the capital and court of the Nizam has been perplexing to many, and tantalising to not a few, we think that, when the nomination which the Government has at length made is publicly known, the general voice will admit that the result has been worth waiting for. Mr. G. U. Yule, of the Bengal civil service, and lately officiating as chief commissioner of Oude, is the officer selected to represent the British Government as resident at Hyderabad; and we know no political appointment that has been made on better or fairer grounds, or with a more conscientious view to the interests of the Government and the public. Mr. Yule's past services are the best guarantee that could be given of his future utility in the high and onerous position which he will now have to fill, and to discharge the duties of which he will bring a rare combination of personal and political qualifications; calm temper combined with great firmness, excellent judgment and thorough knowledge of the native character, untiring industry and energy, and business and political capacity of the first order. —Englishman.

BREACHES OF CONTRACT.

The following report of a select committee was presented to the Council of the Governor-general of India, for the purpose of making laws and regulations, on December 10, 1862:—

HOME DEPARTMENT.—LEGISLATIVE.

We, the undersigned, members of the select committee of the Council of the Governor-general of India, for the purpose of making laws and regulations, to whom the Bill relating to Breaches of Contract committed in bad faith was referred, have the honour to report that we have considered this measure in connection with the despatch addressed on the 9th of June, 1862, by the Secretary of State for India to the Government of India.

2. The Committee have been attempting to determine the exact effect of that despatch on their deliberations, or on those of the Council, for they consider that the opinion expressed on a former occasion by the Honourable the present Chief Justice of Bengal, in reference to a similar communication, may be adopted in the present instance, and that, under the circumstances, it could be neither for the public interest, nor for the dignity of the Council, that a project of law should be proceeded with, which, if passed, would certainly be annulled in a few months.

3. The Secretary of State, in the last paragraph of his despatch, has expressed a doubt whether any legislative interference in commercial transactions, with the view of coercing one of the parties to a contract, can be productive of good. The Committee have, however, been of opinion that this doubt ought not to prevent them from considering whether the Bill is susceptible of such modifications as would be likely to remove or diminish the probability of its ultimate disallowance.

4. After attentive examination of the Bill and of the despatch, the select committee have come to the conclusion that no modification of the Bill, short of its complete transformation into a measure of a different kind, would neutralise the objections of the Secretary of State for India. Not to mention passages of his despatch, in which the Secretary of State takes exception to the sole machinery by which the law could be carried into effect, the committee have especially directed their attention to the language of the 9th paragraph, in which he appears to object to any inquiry into the motives and intentions of the defendant in a suit for breach of contract, and into "the reasonableness or otherwise of the numberless excuses which may be urged for failing to fulfil the engagement." Such an inquiry, as it seems to the committee, is imparatively required by the principle of the Bill before them.

5. The select committee beg therefore to recommend the withdrawal of the Bill.

6. They have not thought fit to advert to the question whether any further legislation on the subject is necessary or possible, since they are of opinion that such legislation, if attempted, must take a form distinct from that assumed by the measure which has been referred to them.

MISCELLANEOUS.

GOVERNMENT NOTES.—The Englishman thus alludes to the slowly growing circulation of the new Government paper, and to the presumed causes of its tardy acceptance with the native community:—"The issue of Government notes evidently does not go on so rapidly as was anticipated by those who sanguinely advocated their introduction. According to the last returns, it amounted only to Rs. 4,58,00,000, or about enough to meet the requirements of the Presidency banks and their branches. We are not in the least surprised at this. In the first place, the issue being in the hands of joint-stock banks, the fact of their being a Government currency is lost sight of by the majority of the native traders; and those who know better, the shroffs, soucars, and others engaged in banking, and the issue of hoondies, carefully keep that knowledge to themselves; and we are assured frequently mislead those who are ignorant upon the subject. In fact, as we always predicted, the circulation of these notes is directly or indirectly opposed by that powerful class who have hitherto had, except in the Presidency cities, the monopoly of the banking and exchange business throughout India. They know perfectly well that the larger the amount of currency notes put in circulation, so much less would be their profits upon a branch of their business which performed the same functions as a means of remittance as that afforded by the Government currency."

THE PUNJAB IRREGULAR FORCE.—We understand that the Supreme Government, having taken into consideration the long and highly valuable services of the Punjab Irregular Force, extending over a period of twelve years, during which the wildest and most turbulent tribes, perhaps, in all Asia have been checked, controlled, and, when necessary, punished, is desirous of expressing its own appreciation of those services, and also procuring some marks of their recognition from the home Government, in the shape of rewards, honorary and professional, for some of the higher officers of the force. Hitherto, the only military rewards that have been especially granted to the Punjab Irregular Force have been confined to the promotion of Captain Koyes, commanding the 1st Punjab Infantry, to a brevet majority, and the commendation of the Government expressed with reference to the services of Captain Butt, commanding the Hazara Mountain Train—not a very liberal recompense, it must be confessed. In consideration of the difficult and important services, in a military point of view, performed by Brigadier-general N. Chamberlain with such signal success, not only in his expedition against our border enemies, but on several previous occasions, the Indian Government have recommended to the Secretary of State for India that this distinguished officer's name should be submitted for the favourable consideration of her Majesty, with a view to his being raised to the honour of a Knight Commander of the Bath; and that the next senior officer of the Punjab Irregular Force, Lieut.-colonel H. B. Lumsden, C.B., should receive the brevet rank of colonel. It has also been suggested to the Secretary of State for India that Captain C. Pollard, of the Engineers, who served with distinction in the Punjab campaign, and who is mentioned in terms of high commendation by Brigadier-general Chamberlain, should receive a brevet majority, and, as we understand, that Surgeon H. B. Buckle, of the Bengal Medical Service, and principal medical officer of the Punjab Irregular Force, should be made a C.B. As the Punjab Irregular Force is, beyond any comparison, the most valuable portion of the entire native army in India, we suppose that the home Government will not hesitate to accede to these recommendations, and procure the rewards that are indicated, which, we presume, are intended to smooth the way for the transfer of the force to the hands of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, and the termination of its existence as a separate and distinct military body, apart from the rest of the Bengal army, now on the eve of accomplishment. The Punjab Irregular Force has certainly done good and gallant service, and deserves well of the Government and the country; and from its peculiar composition and character we hope that, although made over to the Commander-in-Chief, and merged, as it were, into the mass of the Bengal army, it will always continue to serve on the frontier of the north-west, which it and its officers know so well how to manage and control.

THE LATE KING OF DELHI'S SONS.—Though most comfortably lodged with his wife and two sons beside him, and though allowed no little liberty on his parole, the King had, almost since his arrival at Rangoon early in 1858, been disinclined to leave the house. For months back he had been in a comatose state, we are informed. His sons, Jumma Bukht and Abbas Shah, the former "the intelligent youth" described by Colonel Hogge who accompanied him in his daily airing when a prisoner in Delhi, have since being sent to Rangoon, proved eager and successful English scholars. The former has a family of his own, and the question has been raised—what is now to be done with them? We cannot repeat the error made in the case of Tippoo's family, for which we have so dearly atoned, of creating a colony of Mussulmans who must be kept under incessant surveillance. A certain political prestige will always attach to Jumma Bukht and his children.

THE GOLD FIELDS OF LUCKNOW.—In the siege we have heard how the crown treasures, brought out of the Kaiserbagh for safety (as a material guarantee we suppose), and placed on hackeries near to the residency, were robbed by the sentries who ought to have protected them, and that some of the boxes in which the jewels were contained were so old and rotten that it required but a slight tap with a bayonet to bring out pearls and diamonds in handfuls. We remember how gems of surpassing beauty were hawked about by the soldiers and offered for sale for bottles of spirits, and even a few cigars. Out of the house in which the Missionaries now reside, treasure, both in jewels and specie, to a fabulous extent, was taken from the walls by the privates of the 23rd, and afterwards by the 90th, when they relieved them. A happy accident first discovered to a soldier the goldfield in which he was picketted, and he was not slow to improve the opportunity. Walking with some iron instrument in his hand, in a careless way, he struck the wall, which sounded hollow, and part of which came out more easily than it ought to have done; hitting it again, he discovered silver plate to a considerable extent, and before long the whole company were engaged, with any implements they could lay their hands on, in opening the walls and digging up the floors. The treasure found was enormous, and had been buried for long years, this being the only way in which property was secured in those days. Allured by this success, diggings have been going on in all parts of the city, with various success, till at length Lucknow has got the name of a goldfield, and not a little of that feverish excitement approaching to a mania, of which we have read in the early days of Australia and California, has been felt there. Sober, sensible men, in various ranks of life, excepting the very highest, have thrown away for the time their usual good sense and prudence, become indifferent to any work, and occupied themselves in hunting up information, preparatory to hunting up treasure. Of course not a few diggings have been failures. The great demand for any kind of information that could lead to a knowledge of treasure, and the belief that there was treasure almost everywhere, have generated a tribe of professional treasure-finders and diggers, who lie with a distinctness which would particularly deceive most people. This rumour of gold has very probably caused the decrease of "loafers" in Calcutta, of which Commissioner Wanchope speaks, for, certainly, an unusual number of suspicious-looking scoundrels have been seen in and about Lucknow during the past year, who seemed to think Lucknow the Eldorado of India—an idea which the late discovery of jewels to the amount of 13½ lacs is not likely to diminish. —Oudh Gazette.

CROWN LANDS IN CEYLON.—We commend the following extract, from the last Colombo Observer, to the attention of gentlemen who are insisting that the Crown lands of India—if we would not check enterprise—must be sold to all comers at 10s. per acre:—"Sale of Crown lands at Galle. We learn from Galle that four allotments of land containing in extent six acres, situated in the village Goddecande, were sold at the Cutcherry on the 25th November last for £125. 15s., or at the rate of £21 an acre." A correspondent writes to us from Guzerat as follows:—"It has been often repeated by pseudoeconomists that Government would be wise to forego all prospective interest in the soil, and that the loss to the State thereby would be nothing real. How real it would be, let me give you an illustration. In the districts of Guzerat the greater portion of the land is so lightly taxed that, were Government to order a new settlement to-morrow, they would be able to realise more than double the present land revenue; and were an investigation ordered, circumstances would come to light which would remove the ignorance which generally prevails on this subject. The fields here (Dhundooka) are, for instance, estimated in the present settlement at Rs. 17,000, whilst there are now contractors who offer, with the most unexceptional securities, no less a sum than Rs. 40 to 50,000. This is by no means a singular instance, and, if I am correctly informed, Government have decided upon revising the settlement. This is a specimen of the 'trifle' which the State would lose by alienating its interests in the land."

TRADE IN CALCUTTA would be paralysed but for the indigo and opium sales. At Messrs. Moram and Co.'s latest indigo sale 421 chests were disposed of at prices ranging from Rs. 252 to Rs. 210 per factory maund. One of the largest concerns in India has, we understand, sold the whole year's manufacture at an average price of Rs. 272-8, which is fully up to the average of 1861-62. We are glad to learn that the ingathering of this season's crop will leave a very handsome return to the fortunate planters of Tirhoot. The opium crop for 1862-63 will, probably afford a monthly sale of 3,300 chests, as compared with 2,400 chests throughout the year which is about to close. Speculative transactions in the new drug have already taken place for the January sale at Rs. 1,370 per chest—a figure which promises well for the Budget of next year. At Monday's opium sale the Behar drug sold at Rs. 1,426 and the Benares drug at Rs. 1,376 a chest. —Friend of India.

OPENING OF ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.—The new theatre, which Calcutta owes to the high-spirited liberality of one of her citizens, was opened on Dec. 7 with brilliant éclat. Although the building and accessories were not as fully completed as they are to be, the Amateur Theatrical Society, having promised to commence their season on the 3rd of December, determined with commendable resolution to adhere to their word. We gave a short time ago an account of the building itself, its accommodation before and behind the curtain. Extraordinary exertions have been made to have all things ready by the opening night, and we were quite surprised to find with what success. Remembering the cribbed, cabined, and confined building in Wood-street, our delight was not a little in finding ourselves last night in the well-built, roomy, and brilliantly lighted theatre, which we see has been called St. James's, we presume more in honour of its liberal founder than with any reference to his namesake the apostle. On the drawing up of the green curtain the crowded audience were electrified and charmed by the beautiful drop scene, "La Bella Italia," painted by Mr. Gates, of the Princess's Theatre, London. This charming triumph of scenic art fortunately arrived by the Agamemnon in time to honour the opening night with its presence. And while giving every praise to the genius of the London artist, we must not fail to call attention to the temporary proscenium painted by Mr. Frank Lindley, a citizen of Calcutta, whose skill as a draughtsman and knowledge of colour prove him possessed of no mean talent, and whose services will, no doubt, be as invaluable to the amateurs as they will be appreciated by the public. The evening's entertainment opened with the following prologue, written for the occasion, and which was delivered with grace and emphasis:—

With drend like that which some fair bride attends,
Who first in her own house receives her friends;
Watchful where whispers pass, or glances fall,
Yet trusting to good nature after all;
Even so the Drama, between pride and fear,
Deputes her servant bid you welcome here;
Conscious of failings, but relying still
Your kindness for the deed will take the will.

One of our little band, and, I am certain
An equal favourite on both sides the curtain,
Has built the temple, about which you're peeping,
And fairly set the Drama up "housekeeping;"
While, in great part, to liberal friends we owe
The roof above us, and the ground below;
A London model gives our stage erection,
Imported as "the last stage of perfection;"
But for the drying of the plaster waits
A new proscenium by Mr. Gates.
Our scenes are new. I need not add how cleverly
They're painted, when I say the artist's Beverley—
While, since we can to-night display of them none, (Because they're still on board the Agamemnon)—
Mr. Frank Lindley, with fraternal zeal,
Has put his shoulder to our common-ideal;
Besides we've piled in our green-room's recesses
The last new plays, new music, and new dresses;
With "properties" abundant and promiscuous,
From Yorick's skull to Lord Dundreary's whiskers.
When all our store's unpacked a scene you'll view
More worthy of Calcutta and of you;
Worthier the patronage we now enjoy
Of our revered Victoria's Viceroy.
Our Wood-street Club cannot assemble here
Without a sigh for one we all held dear;
Missed in our green-room, in our homes deplored,
A welcome guest at every social board;
His no least worth could every heart engage,
He was an actor—only on the stage!
Among our troupe indulgence I implore
For some who never trod a stage before;
Of course, the chief allowance to be made is
For those young gentlemen who act the ladies.
Ye fair, forgive them—if they caricature you,
'Tis not for want of study, I assure you!
Read their enthusiasm on their lips,
They shave off moustaches—miss their tips!
To "make them beautiful" no pains shall trammel them;

Hush!

Madame Rachel is coming to enamel them.

[Prompter's bell rings.]

But I'm called! To aid our opening scene
The Vocal Union sings "God save the Queen!"
While our orchestra amateurs supply,
Most instrumental in the harmony,
With which we hope that we shall be able
To "pull together" with our well-tried Cable.

The farce which followed, entitled "Slowtop's Engagements," was admirably performed, and brought down roars of merriment and loud applause. The four characters were well sustained. Madame Valene Wapshott (we must, of course, give the ladies preference of notice) was a very charming young widow of the "sterner" sex. Mary Fluff was equally at home in the envelopments of crinoline, as in less dangerous habiliments. Uncle Bang and Mr. Clarence Grey-leaf were very well acted, and their efforts to please met with frequent and deserved applause. The concluding piece was Dance's charming little comedy of the "Wonderful Woman," a somewhat daring play for amateurs to undertake before an audience, many of whom perhaps have seen Madame Vestris as Hortense, and Frank Matthews as Crepin; but there was certainly no cause for disappointment last night. The very difficult part of Hortense was performed with much tact and felicity. The Marquis was very well acted by the gentleman who played Uncle Bang in the preceding piece, and who, though an Amateur, is evidently no tyro. Of the Cobbler we have nothing to say, but in the highest commendation. It was a carefully-studied performance by one who is evidently, in his "line," a finished actor. It was a close copy of Frank Matthews, and we liked it on that account. A good copy is always better than a bad original, and as we believe that no man could play the part better than Frank Matthews, we were delighted to find old reminiscences awakened by the faithful manner in which the character of the old cobbler, its blunt honesty, its quiet sarcastic wit, and its deep pathos of meaning were brought again before us by the gentleman who played the part last night. He is the liberal citizen also, we believe, to whom Calcutta is indebted for the new theatre, so, as actor and citizen, has doubly earned the thanks of the community. At this late hour we have only time to give our hearty award of praise to the orchestral amateurs for the "sweet music they discoursed," and to the Calcutta Vocal Union, who sang "God Save the Queen" with good and thrilling effect.—Bengal Hurkaru, Dec. 8th.

CAMP BURHEE, Dec. 10.—A battery 14th brigade royal artillery marched from Hazareebaugh on the 8th inst., having been delayed a week on account of no carriage being obtainable nearer than Gyah and Dinapore. A subaltern and forty men of the battery are still left at Hazareebaugh for the protection of the station. This, we suppose, will necessitate the detention of the battery in Calcutta for some days, to enable this detachment to join the head-quarters of the battery prior to embarkation. It is rumoured that a company of the 43rd will be sent up at once to Hazareebaugh, to take charge of the station till the arrival of the 52nd regiment.

DELHI, Dec. 7.—Troops in course of relief are passing through the station daily—the 20th Hussars, B Battery Royal Horse Brigade, H.M.'s 81st Europeans, and the 1st Bengal Native Infantry. The latter are still here. They marched in on Friday, and leave to-morrow morning. Preparations are in course of completion for the soldiers' games in H.M.'s 82nd Regiment. They had a friendly match at cricket with the 81st, when the latter was passing through, and got a good trouncing from the younger regiment. But there are some excellent "bats" in the 82nd, and they will regain their laurels if opportunity offers. The announcement of the ex-King's death has excited but little commotion here, which is probably owing to the fact of the report having been circulated within a fortnight of the time when the event occurred. It is a remarkable circumstance that the people all knew of the death of their puppet King at least six weeks ago. How they manage to get news so quickly I do not pretend to know, but their means of communication is certainly worthy of imitation. In connection with the event there is a report, very generally believed, that the remains of the exile have been sent to Delhi under a guard, and that they are interred in the vault of his ancestors, over which a new shrine will be built. Although this is scarcely probable, it is believed, and somebody will profit by it. It is extremely likely that Jewun Bucklit, the "interesting youth," will be looked upon with that morbid sympathy which leads to the commission of such extraordinary errors in our Indian administration; but if the voice of common sense can guide our rulers, I trust it will not be forgotten that this same youth is a murderer of Christian women, and that he must never be allowed another opportunity of indulging in his favourite pastime of shedding their blood.

CASH BALANCES IN INDIA GOVERNMENT TREASURIES.—The following statement of cash balances, as reported up to this date in the Government Treasuries in India at the close of the month of October last, contrasted with that of the previous years, is published for general information:—

According to the present limits of the several Governments.	1860. Oct.	1861. Oct.	1862. Oct.
Govt. of India	Co.'s Rs. 2,71,81,561	Co.'s Rs. 4,51,78,291	Co.'s Rs. 5,70,22,069
" Bengal	1,63,80,765	1,57,30,877	1,83,30,927
" N.W. Provinces	2,24,29,988	1,80,51,823	2,45,96,703
" Punjab	1,08,11,134	89,77,290	86,04,561
" Bombay	3,07,76,473	3,46,09,316	2,39,22,409
" Central P	50,59,858	50,55,569	43,71,996
" Decan	12,57,615	7,95,506	12,39,864
" Madras	99,05,577	1,42,50,970	2,14,08,856
Total	12,38,02,971	14,26,59,101	15,94,97,373

To this amount (£16,000,000) must be added a cash balance at the India House of probably not less than £2,000,000. That this immense balance is six or eight millions in excess of our Treasury requirements there can be very little doubt; a fact sufficient of itself to show how needless was the imposition of the Income-tax. We have certainly not realised £4,000,000 by that tax, while we find our cash balances £6,000,000 to £8,000,000 more than we want.

SIR BARTLE FRERE AND SIR J. P. GRANT.—A friend writes to us from Calcutta as follows:—"I believe you are quite right as to Sir Bartle Frere. Personally, I was much attached to him, but it was very trying to see his house thrown open to all the most bitter assailants of J. P. Grant—to hear of Grant being summoned to the meetings at Government house, there to be assailed and insulted, while he could say nothing without entering into a squabble; to watch the progress of Government by associations, and then, finally, to see Lord Canning, in his last and least honourable year, led into clap-net measures; the letter attacking Grant, for instance, last December (which was Beadon's), the reduction of the troops in Assam against Grant's protest, and the waste lands resolutions—in all of which Sir Bartle's influence was discoverable. But he is so sincerely desirous to do right, so firm when convinced that a point of duty is really involved, and so well acquainted with your presidency, that he may prove an admirable Governor of Bombay. One advantage he has there is, that he will not have all the press against him (as he must have had here) in any really impartial policy; and another is, that he is surrounded by a much more independent and trustworthy European mercantile community."

THE ORIENTAL GAS COMPANY have most liberally come forward with their practical aid towards the success of the ball to be given for the benefit of the distressed Lancashire workpeople at the Town-hall on the 11th, the company having engaged to light up all the building free of expense, except to themselves, at a cost of not less than four hundred rupees. We hope that the liberality of the Gas Company towards others, and in so good a cause, will be attended with ultimate benefit to themselves. Is it unreasonable to ask why should not others, provisioners, wine-merchants, &c., also contribute, each in his way, to diminish the expense of this ball, and swell the profits which are to go towards alleviating the sufferings of our fellow-countrymen, the probable term of which no one can foresee?—Englishman.

THE PROSPECTS OF THE COTTON CROP in Northern and Central India are both better and worse than we had expected—better in the Central Doab, where the produce is of an average character; worse, especially in the cotton field proper, on the right bank of the Jumna, where the failure, owing to storms, has been considerable. Meanwhile the last gathered crop pours down into Calcutta in a continuous stream. As soon as the cotton is picked, it is cleaned, packed, and despatched from every considerable bazaar. The traveller in the north-west finds the serais crowded to overflowing with cotton carts, and the ghats and railway approaches blocked up. The result is that specie is flowing up country, and the value of money rules high at Mirzapore and Benares.—Friend of India.

SIR CHARLES TREVELYAN.—MR. INDIGO FORBES WILL BE THE DEATH OF HIM.—In the appointment of Sir Charles Trevelyan Indigo Forbes sees nothing left for the Landholders' Association "But to summon up the iconoclastic spirit of their Puritan forefathers, and to go in for a smash at the image which is to be set up in the maiden, for the peoples, and nations, and tongues to fall down and worship. Remember, that he who overthrows an idol has no hatred to the mere materials of which it is composed, and I would wish you to upset Sir Charles Trevelyan with the greatest gentleness imaginable. I would not have his nose or fingers broken, nor even his features chipped, but laid down he must be; for the land which, in 1857, went through the baptism of blood into a better faith, must not again bow down before civilianism, nor must Sir Chas. Wood be worshipped in the image of Sir Charles Trevelyan." The Colonist party in Calcutta generally is beginning to see that the day of "Government by Associations" is already passed. The Friend of India complains that "Lord Canning's death, Mr. Laing's personal dispute, forced upon him by Sir C. Wood, and the formation of a new and Conservative administration in India itself, have made it necessary that the battle of the last four years be fought over again."

THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF's flying camp was to leave Jhansie for Saugor on the 18th. The following officers accompany it:—Captain Moore, A.D.C. and Interpreter, Colonel Johnson, Captain Ravenhill, Major Roberts, V.C., Colonel Sarel, Colonel Torrens, and Captain Burne. They are to make the whole distance, 132 miles, in six days. From Saugor his Excellency will go to Jubbulpore, leaving the flying camp to proceed towards Rewa, where he will rejoin it. The camp will be at Allahabad about the 15th January, and the Commander-in-Chief will arrive at Lucknow about the 22nd or 23rd. Sir Hope Grant will be there at the same time. The large camp marches from Jhansie on the 19th or 20th, and goes via Calpee and Cawnpore to Lucknow.—Delhi Gazette, Dec. 20.

We understand that Captain R. P. Jones, of the Royal Artillery, is in arrest, pending his trial by court-martial, on charges arising out of pecuniary defalcations in the estate of the late Lieut. G. B. Stephenson, of the 4th Battery, 14th Brigade, Royal Artillery. The matters upon which the charges against Captain Jones are grounded date as far back as August of last year; when Captain Jones was commanding the above-mentioned battery, and his subaltern, Lieutenant Stevenson, was away on sick leave at Nynee Tal, where he afterwards died. Captain Jones's battery is at present at Benares, where he is to be tried; but was at Allahabad when the circumstances which have led to the court-martial took place.

DEATH OF THE RAJAH OF KEONTHAL.—We see by the Ondk Gazette that another influential chieftain, the Rajah of Keonthal, died a few days ago, after only a few hours' illness. His death, following so rapidly after that of the Rajah of Puttiala, has been attributed by the superstitious natives to witchcraft. It is only two or three years ago that these people burnt an unfortunate old woman on the plea that she was better acquainted with the powers of darkness than she ought to be. The chieftain was fined Rs. 1,000 for this act of barbarity; but owing to the protection, and in consideration of the aid which he afforded to the British during the mutiny of 1857, the fine was remitted. The Rajah of Keonthal, previous to the invasion of the Goorkas, and the occupation of his provinces by the British, was one of the most powerful of the hill princes, and received tribute from all the neighbouring chieftains, who looked upon him as their suzerain; and so strong in the force of habit that even to this day the chiefs of all the petty districts around look upon him as immeasurably superior to themselves.

THE LANCASHIRE RELIEF BALL on the night of Dec. 11th is pronounced a success:—"The Town Hall of Calcutta never before assumed so brilliant an appearance as last night, when the long delayed ball more than fulfilled the anticipations of its energetic promoters, upon whom its success in almost all its details reflected the highest credit. The effect of the experimental gas lighting rendered any return to the old oil system out of the question. The whole area was more than decorated, it was crowded, with the flags of all nations; and a prettier scene could scarcely be imagined than when the crowd of dancers stood aside to receive Lord Elgin on his arrival at ten o'clock. About six hundred must have been present, and we should hope that the result will be not much under three thousand rupees for the Relief Fund. The general verdict was that it was a really 'jolly' party, all present, the highest in the services, with the commercial and trading classes, mixing unreservedly in the thronged dances; and we saw and heard of nothing to mar the entire enjoyment of the evening except that two or three unfortunates, unwarned by its peculiar colour, ventured upon 'trying' the champagne. However, nothing worse resulted than the necessity to take a little brandy to avert evil consequences; those who did taste it will look twice before they try 'a strange tap' again in the Town hall. When we left the room about one o'clock the dancing had been renewed with all the vigour of after supper; and the then departing early birds agreed that the ball had been on the whole one of the most enjoyable of its kind ever attempted in Calcutta. It was a good work, well done."

LIEUT. JACKSON'S TRIAL.—We have received the following from Mooltan, relative to Lieutenant Jackson's trial:—"The General Court Martial for the trial of Lieutenant Lewis D'Aguilar Jackson, of the Royal Bengal Engineers, assembled here on the 12th. Colonel Boyle, H.M.'s 89th Foot, is President of the Court; Major Young is the Deputy Judge Advocate-General; Lieutenant Bewsher, of the Punjab Commission, is prosecutor. The prisoner is assisted in his defence by Mr. A. Scoble, of the Bombay Bar. Only two witnesses have been examined as yet, Messrs. Clerk and Wade, Eurasian writers, who were spectators of the flogging, from the effects of which the late khidmutgar, Munnoo Khan, is alleged to have died. It was Mr. Wade who called upon Major Nicholls, the Deputy Commissioner, to stop the flogging. The evidence of the two witnesses is very conflicting as to the length of time the beating was continued. One witness swears positively that from first to last it continued three quarters of an hour, with the exception of three intervals of from seven to ten minutes. The other is equally positive that it lasted one hour and three quarters. The other witnesses who saw the flogging going on are natives. The man when removed from the tree to which he was tied during the operation was in a very exhausted state, but very soon recovered, and for several days afterwards he was not considered to be in any danger by the medical man who attended him. He died ten clear days after the flogging. The immediate cause of death was inflammation of the right lung. The left kidney was found in an advanced stage, and the right in an incipient stage of Bright's disease. The accused is tried under Section 300, para. 3, of the Penal Code."—Delhi Gazette, Dec. 20.

MEERUT, Dec. 18.—This station keeps up its old character for gaiety. Since the cool weather set in, and the "hill birds" returned to their plain duties, scarce a week has passed without something or other to enliven people, and when private entertainments begin to flag there are plenty of public ones to fill up the vacancies. The new theatre was well filled last night, and during Christmas week there will be several performances. The old one seems to be deserted, perhaps because it is old, but I doubt if the new one will ever see such acting on its stage, for those actors having have departed to that bourne whence no traveller returns. The excellent scenery remains almost as good as the first day it was painted. The troops were out yesterday, and judging from the roar of artillery from 7 till 9 A.M., they had a busy morning.

THE DELHI MISSION SCHOOL.—We have to announce that the distribution of prizes to the successful pupils of the Delhi Mission School will take place on Saturday, the 20th instant, at 11 o'clock. This school is a "grant-in-aid" one, and was established soon after the mutiny by the Rev. T. Skelton. At present the number of lads receiving instruction in it is about 240. The first class have made such progress during the last three years that they are now being prepared to pass the entrance examination of the Calcutta University; and, consequently, they are now reading the "University Courses for 1863," "Brief Survey of History," "Murray's History of India," &c., &c., and mathematics. They will soon master the first four books in Euclid, with deduction, algebra up to the first two unknown quantities, and arithmetic up to the standard required for the University. In the last report of the Director of Public Instruction, Punjab, this school is mentioned as being the best in the Umballa circle. Our readers may be aware that Captain Fuller, the able and energetic Director of Public Instruction in the Punjab, has lately ordered an examination of all the Government and grant-in-aid schools in his circle to be held every October. Two examinations have now been held,—one last year, one in the present. The result of the first examination here has been published. Of the Government schools, the Umritsar stands first, and of the Grant-in-aid or Mission Schools, the Delhi stands first. People now-a-days don't seem to care much for Mission schools, and think that in a station like Delhi, where there is a large Government school, a missionary one is superfluous and out of place. This is a great mistake. Two schools are by no means sufficient for this station. The number of boys receiving instruction in both the Government and Mission schools is about 600, and can any one say that there are only 600 boys in Delhi willing to learn English? By no means; hundreds more are anxious to learn, but they are either too poor to pay the entrance fee—one rupee—of the Government school, or are prevented by their parents from entering the Mission one. Prejudice is, and will be for some time to come, an obstacle to the progress of education in India; and until the people of this country learn to value education as the forerunner of all that makes a man really civilised and enlightened, the exertions now being made by Government and others will be in vain."

THE BHOOTEAS.—We hear from Gawalparah of the gathering of a body of Bhooteas on that frontier. The Deputy Commissioner of the division has been directed by Government to proceed to Purbutoor forthwith, to take up his quarters near the place where the Bhooteas have collected, but to avoid collision with them by all means in his power. Colonel Dunsford, C.B., commanding the troops on the north-east frontier, has been requested to send some troops as early as possible. The object of the assemblage of the Bhooteas, it is said, is to take by force a Soobah who has taken shelter over the frontier. We further learn from the same quarter that an officer of the Geological Department has been deputed by Government to ascertain and report the best plan for working coal in Kamroop.—Englishman, Dec. 13.

BHOPAL.—We have received most satisfactory and interesting news from Bhopal in connection with her Highness the Secunder Begum. This highly enlightened and excellent lady, who serves as such a bright example to all other Rajahs and Begums at present occupying territory in British India, has just introduced the Stamp Act into her territories, and means, we believe, to have the carrying out of it rigorously enforced. The anniversary of the Star of India was celebrated there with great pomp and state. The Agent of the Governor-general and a large number of European and Native gentlemen were present on the occasion, and Lieutenant Waterfield succeeded in getting some good photographs of the whole scene.

THE GIRL JANE.—Mr. F. Cooper, C.B., Deputy Commissioner of Delhi, has returned from Jhujur, whither he had gone on special duty for the purpose of investigating the case of the girl "Jane," supposed by many to be of European parentage, whose identity has been several times the cause of correspondence in our columns. We are not aware of the result, nor will it be publicly known for some days. Our own opinion, which was in favour of the child being European, has been considerably shaken during a recent journey towards Hissar; inasmuch as at Rohtuck there is a child much fairer, and much more like a purely European child than the little foundling under notice; and there can be no doubt about her parentage. We consider the probabilities of the girl Jane being of native origin considerably strengthened; but until the Deputy Commissioner's report is made known it would be as well to say no more about the matter.—Delhi Gazette.

ALLAHABAD, Dec. 17.—The chief event of the past week has been the departure of Sir George Couper, who proceeded on Friday last to Lucknow, to assume charge of the high and responsible office of Judicial Commissioner. Mr. Sandford, the Under-Secretary to Government, has, as a temporary arrangement, been appointed Officiating Secretary, and Mr. Howell has assumed charge of Mr. Sandford's duties of Under-Secretary. This arrangement, it is expected, will continue till the appointment of the next Lieutenant-Governor is decided upon. It is useless speculating as to the relative chances of the several officers who have been named as fitting candidates for the Proconsulship of these provinces. It seems quite clear that his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-general has not made up his mind about conferring the appointment on any of the officers who have been named at different times; but if the vacancy is to be filled up by any of the civilians of the North-West Provinces the most popular nomination would be that of Mr. Muir, senior member of the Board of Revenue.

SUICIDE OF MR. MOULINIE.—A melancholy occurrence took place on the night of the 5th Dec. at a village called Ucharra, about eight miles from Myhere. Mr. Moulinie, a Frenchman, an inspector belonging to the East Indian Railway, Jubulpore line, committed suicide by poisoning himself with laudanum. Three letters were found upon his table addressed to his friends, and an empty phial which had recently contained laudanum. The deceased had served throughout the mutiny in the Bengal Yeomanry Cavalry.—Delhi Gazette, Dec. 18.

H.M.'s 89TH REGT.—A letter from Mooltan of the 14th Dec. says:—H.M.'s 89th marched into Mooltan on the 11th to relieve the 101st Bengal Fusiliers, which regiment commences its march for Rawul Pindie on the 10th, proceeding via Jhung. They will be at Jhung on or about the 25th December, Wuzerabad, the 7th January, Jhelum, the 14th, and Rawul Pindie, the 21st.

THE STATION STAFF OFFICERS at Raneegunge have received official notice that from the last day of this month (November) their staff salaries will cease; and this notification is, of course, tantamount to an order for the abandonment of Raneegunge, now no longer useful as a military station.

A STRANGE CIRCUMSTANCE occurred the other day. A European in hospital here, belonging to the detachment that lately left for Benares, purchased from a native a cake or loaf, and upon cutting it open found in it half a rat. Dr. McLean immediately had the seller of the loaf seized and sent up to the commanding officer. The fellow's defence was that the rat must have jumped into the dough while it was being kneaded—strange that one half of the animal had managed to jump out again. We have not heard the result of the reference. The vendor ought to be publicly horse whipped.—Allahabad Gazette.

THE WEATHER at DELHI has not undergone any change since our last notice of it; the season continues unusually mild, and unless we have the usual Christmas rain we fear that our winter will prove the mildest known for years. For the last day or two, in the early morning, heavy clouds have come up from the south-east, but they generally disperse when the sun rises.—Delhi Gazette, Dec. 20.

THE ARTILLERY AND THE 82ND REGIMENT are greatly improving in health during the last month: it is time they should; the 82nd Regiment was nearly eleven hundred strong when it first came to Delhi, it now numbers something considerably short of a thousand.

NATIVE TROOPS IN CHINA.—We regret to see by our China papers that the bad sanitary condition of the British forces in Shanghai is one of the chief topics of the day, though the native troops stationed there—viz., 5th Bombay and 22nd Regiments of Bengal Native Infantry, have suffered comparatively little, either from disease or mortality. This immunity cannot in any way be attributed to superior advantages of locality or barracks. On the contrary, those corps are in every respect worse housed than the European troops, and from this we can only draw the inference that the habits of life and natural constitutions of certain classes of the natives of Hindostan render them better suited than Europeans for service in climates similar to this, and confer greater powers of resistance upon them, when brought under the operation of epidemic influences, than that class of men who, as a general rule, constitute the enlisting population. The prevalent epidemic has likewise been telling sadly upon our sailors, a mortality even more appalling having occurred amongst the shipping in the harbour than on shore. For twenty years Shanghai has been a foreign settlement, but never during that period has there been such a season of disease and pestilence as has prevailed during the last summer, and so far from there being any abatement of that frightful disease, cholera, it is to be feared that it is gaining ground more day by day. In nine days after the arrival of H. M.'s ships Euryalus, bearing Vice-Admiral Kuper's flag, cholera seized upon the crew, and has already carried off a captain of marines, a naval officer, and over twenty men, besides prostrating over one third of the whole crew.

THE CALCUTTA RIFLE CORPS.—A volunteer writes:—"Two at least of the companies have elected their officers, so I send their names, as they may interest your readers. The captains are Mr. W. C. Hannah, of Messrs. Monteith and Co., boot, shoe, and harness makers, and Mr. Abbot, attorney-at-law. Mr. F. Jennings, of Messrs. Ostler and Co., the well-known glass manufacturers, consented to be elected lieutenant, and other subalterns are Mr. J. Brace, of the staff of the Doveton College, and Mr. James Knight, of Harraden and Co.'s. There should now be nothing to prevent the corps becoming a crack one as regards drill (there are paid professional instructors) in at furthest two months. The spirit amongst all ranks is most excellent, and I anticipate everything will go on swimmingly."

SALARIES TO MOONSIFFS.—One of the first and principal acts of Mr. Beadon, on his being installed into office as Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, appears to be a scheme, submitted by him some time ago to the Government of India, for revising the scale of salaries of the moonsiffs. The Government of Bengal has proposed that the officers of Sudder Ameens should be abolished, and that the moonsiffs be divided into three grades—the first on a salary of rupees three hundred, the second on two hundred and fifty, and the third and the last grade on rupees two hundred per mensem. Candidates for promotion to the offices of Principal Sudder Ameens, should be selected from the first grade moonsiffs. The proposition appears to be a judicious one, inasmuch as that hard-working class of public officers was hitherto very poorly paid, and some concession ought, therefore, to be made to them, who are called upon to perform duties no less onerous than those of the other Uncovenanted Judicial Officers. The above-mentioned proposition, we hear, has been referred to the Secretary of State for sanction. If our memory serves us aright a similar proposal was made during the administration of Lord Dalhousie, but no notice was taken of it in consequence of the sepoy mutiny, which then just broke out in the North-Western Provinces, and engrossed the attention of the Supreme Government.—Hurkaru.

THE 77TH REGIMENT are gradually going into quarters, but a portion of the corps is still under canvass, as also several of the officers, the barracks being still undergoing repair. The regiment is out almost daily at parades, and the fine band keeps alive that portion of the station which is contiguous to the Clydesdale lines.

COLONEL HAYTHORNE'S LETTER.—(Copy).—"The Honorary Secretary, United Service Club, Calcutta.—Simla, 9th Sept., 1862.—Sir,—Although I have not been favoured with a copy of the circular issued under the authority of the Committee of Management of the United Service Club, respecting the matter of Colonel Priestley and Major Fitzgerald, I have seen one addressed to the Military Secretary to his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, and as Vice-President of the Club I feel it my duty to record my distinct objection to the course pursued by you as Honorary Secretary, under the authority of the said Committee of Management. I consider—1. That it was a most injudicious and unwarrantable proceeding to pronounce Colonel Priestley guilty of a breach of the 24th article of the club rules, without having ascertained the real bearings of the case; for if the rule bore at all on the case, which it does not, it should have been applied to the real disturber of the harmony of the club, viz.: to Major Fitzgerald, who insulted Colonel Priestley. 2. That you, on behalf of the committee, departed entirely from your competency in interfering with Colonel Priestley as regards the measures taken by him to resent a deliberate insult (it is so represented by Colonel Priestley) offered to him. 3. Colonel Priestley and Major Fitzgerald were not on friendly terms, and yet the latter made the former a recipient of his calumnious expressions respecting the Commander-in-chief. 4. That the insult was a great one to Colonel Priestley is proved by the apology tendered to him by Major Fitzgerald. It was not of a nature, however, to permit of its being settled by an apology; it was a breach of the 54th article of war, and if Colonel Priestley had accepted such apology he would have incurred a responsibility which he had no power to do. 5. Had Colonel Priestley reported an observation which he had heard casually at table, or even addressed to himself by a friend, I should be the last person to advocate his cause; but the case was far different. 6. It is stated in the circular that Colonel Priestley reported the case to me as adjutant-general of her Majesty's forces. It is only justice to Colonel Priestley to inform you that in his report Colonel Priestley states that throughout the proceedings of a special inquiry in which these officers had been associated together, he had been obliged to put up with innuendoes and observations of a depreciatory character regarding the Commander-in-chief's communication on the important subject of their investigations. It was this circumstance which had created a feeling the reverse of friendly between Colonel Priestley and Major Fitzgerald. Under these circumstances I maintain that Colonel Priestley cannot be accused of acting in violation of private confidence; he proceeded in the manner appointed by the regulations of the service and the Articles of War, and which, as an officer, and especially as commanding officer of a regiment, he was bound to do. 8. Therefore, as I said before, you, as honorary secretary of the committee of management, in my opinion, departed entirely from your competency in the course pursued by you. 9. I maintain that the committee have created a rule by their proceedings in this case which is quite unjustifiable, viz., that an officer is insulted at the club table, and if he takes the measures required by the regulations of the service he renders himself liable to expulsion from the club, which, at home, is the greatest disgrace that can be passed on a man, and which at home is only inflicted for swindling, or serious crimes. 10. I maintain that the circular is not drawn up in a manner to put the case clearly before the members of the club, whose decision is requested on it; and the termination of it actually suggests to the members the manner in which they should support the committee in the unusual course they have adopted. 11. It appears by the notice to the members that Major Fitzgerald was invited by you to send in a statement of what took place, but no such course was taken as regards Colonel Priestley. On the contrary, in your letter of the 9th August you debar him from stating anything beyond a simple reply to your question. 12. As a vice-president of the club it has been my duty, in the interests of the establishment, to state these facts, and to point out to you that your circular notice to the absent members of the club does not put the real facts of the case before them, or remove the erroneous impressions which they will have formed from reading incorrect accounts of the case which have found their way into the newspapers. If any general meeting is held I protest against a decision being taken on votes or opinions founded on your circular. As Adjutant General H.M.'s forces in India it becomes my duty to say, with regard to the military members of the club, that the regulations of H.M. Service forbid the meeting of military officers to discuss military matters or to pass censure or praise; and that to do so in the case in question is still more irregular, as the whole matter has been reported to the chief military authority, as stated in your circular notice.—I have, &c., (signed) E. Haythorne, Col. A. G. and a Vice President of U. S. Club."—Phoenix, Dec. 9.

THE VICEROY'S VISIT TO DELHI.—There will be a grand durbar in Delhi on the occasion of the Viceroy's visit in February. All the chiefs from the surrounding States will be invited to attend, and the arrangements will be on a scale of unprecedented grandeur, even for Delhi. We believe that orders have already been received to "put the station into order," and it is to be hoped that the roads will be in a better state ere long than they are at present, or his Excellency and his numerous attendants will not be best pleased with the arrangements made for visiting the Jumma Musjid, and other remarkable sights of Delhi.

THE TWENTY-THIRD R. W. FUSILIERS.—The first detachment of the 23rd R. W. F. came into Agra Dec. 19 by train. The regiment comes up in three detachments, and the 35th goes down in the same manner, the first leaving Dec. 20. The delay and inconvenience that necessarily attends travelling on an unfinished railway is well exemplified in the fact that the 35th, if it marched every step of the way from Agra to Fyzabad, would reach its destination only one day later than it will now, making so large a part of the journey as the distance between Agra and Cawnpore by rail.

MAJOR-GENERAL A. BEECHER, C.B., Quarter-master-general of the army, it is said, to be brought on the divisional staff, to succeed Major-general Campbell in the Benares command.

OPHTHALMIA.—There is scarcely a European child in Agra that is not suffering from a species of contagious ophthalmia, which is most distressing to witness.

DINNER TO SIR HOPE GRANT, GIVEN BY H. E. NAWAB MOOK-THAR-WOL MOOLK SALAR JUNG BAHADOOR.—HYDERABAD, DECCAN, Dec. 11.—This week we have been presented with a spectacle the magnificence of which recalls to our minds the olden tales we have read of the former grandeur and splendour of "The Gorgeous East," viz., the reception and dinner given by H. E. Nawab Mook-thar-wol Moolk Salar Jung Bahadur, the Prime Minister of the Nizam of Hyderabad, to H. E. Sir Hope Grant, the Commander-in-Chief of Madras, on the evening of Tuesday last, the 9th inst., and which exceeded beyond all conception the expectation of even those to whom the liberality and princely ideas of that nobleman were well known. The company began to assemble about 7 P.M., and at a quarter past H. E. the Commander-in-Chief, accompanied by a troop of H. M.'s 17th Lancers, as escort, arrived, and was received at the entrance to the palace by H. E. the Nawab, surrounded by a most brilliant staff of native noblemen, on whom diamonds and precious stones shone in abundance. Here several introductions took place, and after inspecting the various rooms and curiosities contained in the palace, the distinguished party formed into a procession, H. E. Salar Jung leading Lady Grant, and followed by the remaining company in pairs, proceeded through a lane formed by beautifully-illuminated trellice work, covered with red cloth, to the Baradoory garden-house, which both inside and out was one blaze of light from innumerable glass lustres, and various designs placed around the gardens, cisterns, and every available place that would produce effect. Here covers were laid for 250 guests, nearly all of whom sat down to partake of a most sumptuous repast, consisting of all the delicacies of French and English cookery, together with numerous varieties of native dishes, while wines of the richest and rarest vintage flowed in profusion. Dinner over, the party proceeded upstairs to witness a display of fireworks, which consisted of numerous illuminated revolving pieces of various designs. Shells ascending to a great height which, bursting, produced showers of silver, gold, and red stars, serpents, and various other effects. A large illuminated fort appeared at the end of a tank, on which were several small ships and steamers throwing shells, &c., at the fort, which, after burning with a clear silver light for some time, blew up. This was followed by a discharge of some 800 or 900 Roman candles, so placed that the stars on igniting joined over the centre of the tank, producing innumerable circles of fire from the ground upwards, which had a most pleasing and beautiful effect. Shortly afterwards their Excellencies the Nawab and the Commander-in-Chief took their departure.

BOMBAY.

THE BOMBAY SENIOR MAGISTRATE OF POLICE.

We regret to learn that sickness will compel Mr. Crawford to leave this country for a short time, and we feel we should not be discharging our duty if we did not express the sincere wishes of the entire native community of Bombay for his safe voyage to his native land and speedy return to India with renovated health.

The famous case which brought Mr. Crawford into his present post seems to have unnecessarily created against him strong ill-feelings in some high quarters—as if by a mere association of ideas—and he has been persistently annoyed by persons from different sides. Unfortunately the Bombay native public is so immersed in trade that its leaders appear to have little inclination for any real political status in the community, and an honest expression of native opinion, which might do infinite good both to the governors and the governed, has often to be sought for in the dining saloons at the Breach, or Malabar-hill. The Times of India has done us good service, which we should be the last to forget, but even that journal will, we believe, admit that it can act but partially as an exponent of native feeling. However, we are digressing. In the absence of an able English organ specially to ventilate native views, the local English press often has its own way, and a person whose misfortune it may be to displease a certain party is sure of being run down. We do not pretend to say that Mr. Crawford is perfection personified, but we believe him to be a magistrate of average abilities, with a little more share of volubility, perhaps, than is sometimes consistent with the dignity of the bench, but an upright, painstaking, and a conscientious man. For many years an inhabitant of this island, the climate seems to have improved his naturally conservative disposition to a degree which has often offended many a fast-going European and native; but, we believe, Mr. Crawford has been always willing to learn, and has been throughout a staunch friend of the natives, and of the cause of intellectual and moral progress in India. Trust begets trust, and it will be Mr. Crawford's proud boast to have trusted as he did in the unfortunate times gone by, we trust never to return. We, therefore, again wish him renewed health and all happiness, and hope to see him soon amongst us again.

But who is to be Mr. Crawford's successor? We trust Sir B. Frere will consider well before he puts one in his place. We are not of those who would cry down any particular class, but in the present case there is no qualified civilian of a proper standing available. The first qualification required is that the candidate should be a barrister. The senior magistrate is the ex-officio presiding officer of the court of petty sessions. This court had formerly a barrister on its staff as an assessor on 300 rupees a-month. Since Mr. Crawford's elevation to the magistracy this post has been abolished by a legislative enactment, and the inference is clear that the Legislature itself meant that the president of the court should in future be a legally trained officer. Again, as the ex-officio chairman of H.M. Bench of Justices, we require a lawyer to watch and direct the municipal Government of this growing city. But above all, the office of senior magistrate itself requires a man who has mastered the technicalities of the English law in its various departments, and for these reasons the successor of Mr. Crawford ought to be a barrister. But what sort of a barrister must he be? This is the most important consideration. We do not want one like the briefless who was said to have declared before the late Sudder Court that there was no native of India who ever spoke the truth. Neither do we want a sharp fleecing gentleman fresh from England, who knows nothing of the manners and customs of the numerous races that live in this island, whose ignorance of the principal vernaculars (Guzarati and Marathi) make him wholly dependent on his indifferent interpreters, and whose ideas of India and Indians would not bear scrutiny out of his club. We want a person of firm but conciliatory character, one who has freely mixed with natives of all creeds and ages, understands (at least, for all practical purposes) their vernaculars, has enlightened sympathy for their failings and wants, and is easy of access to all. The senior magistrate ought also to be well-versed in Hindu and Mahomedan law, so as to be able to unravel unassisted the various knotty questions that are sure to come before him, and as part of this law consists in the usages and customs of the people, he must essentially be one who has associated with them and learnt their ways, independently of the distorting medium of the attorneys. Above all he must be a determined foe of kowtowing to either Europeans or natives, or he would be a curse instead of a blessing. We would fight for the choice being made on public grounds, and in consideration of the services the candidates may have rendered to this country, rather than to their connexions here or elsewhere. In a community where the number of Europeans is but like a drop in the oceans, we conceive we have a right to entertain the hope that our wants, which really mean the peace and well-being of the whole community, will be duly considered. Persons with all or at least most of the qualifications mentioned above, are not unfortunately plentiful as blackberries in Bombay, and we sincerely hope that in appointing a successor to Mr. Crawford, Sir B. Frere will not disappoint the expectations which have been cherished about his rule by the native community of Bombay.—Rast Gofar.

NATIVE GIRL SCHOOLS AT BOMBAY.

The distribution of prizes to the pupils of the Students' Literary and Scientific Society's Girls' Schools took place on the 13th instant, at Mr. Munguldass Nathooobhoy's garden-house at Girgaum. The assembly was held in the large hall of the mansion, on the left of which were arranged the seats for the visitors, and on the right were seated on low benches the children, numbering about 400; in the centre were chairs for Sir Bartle and Lady Frere, in the front of which was a table covered with scholarship certificates, work-boxes, and books for prizes. His Excellency Sir Bartle Frere presided on the occasion; a large number of ladies and European and Native gentlemen were present at the meeting, among whom were observed, Lady Frere, the Hon'ble Mr. and Mrs. Inverarity, the Hon'ble Mr. and Mrs. Tristram, Sir Jamsetjee Jejeebhoy, Bart., the Hon. Juggoonath Sunkersett, Brigadier and Mrs. Liddell, Colonel and Miss Lynch, Colonel French, Captain and Mrs. Barker, Mr. and Mrs. Cannon, Miss Reid, Dr. and Mrs. Fraser, Mrs. Mackey, Mr. and Mrs. Pinhey, Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Colvin, Mr. J. R. Arthur, Dr. Steadman, Captain Leach, Major Annesley, Rev. Mr. Aitken, Rev. Mr. Bowen, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas, Mr. and two Misses Maneckjee Cursetjee, the Persian Consul, &c.

Before the proceedings commenced, Sir Bartle and Lady Frere went among the different classes of the girls, and viewed and enquired into all that was interesting to know about them. No doubt they felt it interesting to see so many Hindoo girls assembled, who, by their bright intelligent looks, showed that they really appreciated the instruction they were receiving. The chair having been taken, Rao Sahab Vishwanath Narayan, Secretary of the Society, read the Report.

The elder children were then examined in various branches of their studies, by Rao Sahab Vishwanath, Mr. Bala Mungesh, B.A., and Mr. Javerilall Umiasunker; they gave very intelligent and prompt answers to the various questions put to them in grammar, geography, and arithmetic, showing that their minds had been well imbued with a rudimentary knowledge of common things, as also evincing the pains taken by their teachers in imparting such knowledge. A few Guzeratee and Marathe Hindoo girls also repeated some songs with pretty good taste and feeling, the singing of the latter being rather more harmonious than that of the former. Specimens of embroidery and Berlin-wool work, executed by the girls, were next exhibited to the ladies, and elicited much approbation; after which Lady Frere distributed the prizes to the successful girls, and also puggres (turbans) to the teachers, the last of which appeared a novel feature in the proceedings.

SPEECH OF SIR BARTLE FRERE.

Sir Bartle Frere expressed on behalf of himself and Lady Frere, and of the assembled company, the gratification which the proceedings of the evening had afforded them, and he added that he wished especially to state, on behalf of Government, their high appreciation of the spontaneous efforts which had been made by the gentlemen of the society in promoting female education, and their sense of the great progress which had been already made. His Excellency could not help contrasting what they had witnessed this evening with what he had seen nearly twenty-eight years before in what he believed was the first school established for females of the upper classes in Western India.

Nothing could be stronger than the contrast between the little band of Bramminee girls, who were taught reading and writing almost by stealth in the verandah of a ruinous old palace in Poona, and the scene now before them when they saw the children of some of the wealthiest and most intelligent Hindoo gentlemen in Bombay assembled in such numbers in that magnificent mansion to receive their prizes before the large and influential assemblage then present. But his Excellency said the chief value of the successful exertions of the society was to be found in the high and pure motives which had actuated those who took the leading part in this important work. They had been moved by no desire to secure the approval of Government, for Government was necessarily passive in the matter; they had been actuated by no desire for popular applause, for they had too often met with apathy, misrepresentation and even active opposition. He believed they had been successful mainly owing to the purity of their motive, a single-hearted desire to extend to the daughters of their race the same advantages of education which they themselves had enjoyed and so highly valued. Whether we look to the difficulties they have overcome, or the progress they had achieved, his Excellency felt assured that Dr. Bhau Daji and his associates had established their title to be enrolled among the real heroes and benefactors of their race. But while congratulating them on what they had achieved, his Excellency said he would remind them of the arduous task which still lay before them. They had declared their intention of endeavouring to secure to the women of India the full benefits of an "European system of Education," and looking to what the Society had achieved, his Excellency felt no doubt of their success. But let them ever bear in mind what an European system of education really meant. It meant not merely reading, writing and accounts, the simple rudiments of instruction, but that the woman should be as completely educated as the man. The details of that education would of course vary, but the promise the society had given involved a pledge not to rest content with the results of their exertions till the women of India were so educated as to be the fit companions of the educated men. It was late in the day to attempt to answer any objections as to what "was the use of all this trouble," and whether the women were not better without it. No such question could possibly arise in the minds of those men who had themselves received and appreciated a good education. To all others his Excellency would simply say that it was the fixed and deliberate opinion, not of England only, but of all civilised Europe, that no nation could have a pretence to the character of a civilised nation in which the women were not on a par with the men, in point of refinement and education. Whether civilised Europe was right or wrong in this opinion he would not, his Excellency said, now discuss. He would only assure those among his native friends who had any doubts on the subject that Europe would always distrust the highest pretensions to civilisation in which this one distinctive mark was wanting. It would be said that a good female education involved great expense; of this there could be no doubt, for the report which had just been read pointed to the expense as the one great obstacle which remained, but this was a point on which they would find that the greater progress they made the more would their ideas on the subject expand. At present a few rupees seemed a very large sum to pay for the instruction of the daughters of even the richer members of society, but he believed that before long they would consider no expenditure too great to secure a really sound education for their daughters. His Excellency would appeal to some of the native ladies and gentlemen near him who had travelled in Europe to illustrate what he stated; they would be able to tell their native friends that not only were the sums which are spent in England on the education of daughters absolutely very large, but that in comparison to the whole family income they are relatively far larger than most native gentlemen would believe possible, and that there was in fact no sacrifice which an ordinary English family of the better classes would not make to have its children, but especially the daughters of the family, well educated according to their degree in life. After expressing his concurrence with that portion of the report which pointed to the necessity of home instruction through good governesses and educated mothers of families, his Excellency expressed his conviction that the difficulty with regard to means to which the report alluded would speedily be overcome through the liberality of the native gentlemen of Bombay. In every other respect they might feel confident of success. He appealed to Dr. Bhau Daji's antiquarian researches to confirm his assertion that the non-education of females was a modern innovation totally repugnant to the ancient traditions of the Hindoos; and he instanced Abila Bae Holcor and the present Begum of Bopal as proving that the native ladies of modern days are in no respect inferior to those of ancient days in capacity for filling with distinction the highest and most difficult positions in life.

His Excellency then addressed a few words in Mahratti to the young ladies in the Mahratti classes, who were seated near him expressive of the gratification which their progress had afforded to all present; and on behalf of Lady Frere he said that she hoped on her return from Europe that some of the young ladies in these schools would be able to converse with her in English, and in conclusion his Excellency expressed to the President and members of the committee his hope that they would ere long be able to remove from Bombay the reproach to which he feared it would be liable now that her Gracious Majesty the Queen would have difficulty in finding among her Bombay subjects, any one Hindoo lady of rank who would be able to converse with her Majesty in her own language.

The assembly then broke up a little before seven o'clock, and repaired to the terrace to view the splendid illuminations in the gardens, which were tastefully decorated with festoons and Chinese lanterns, while a large fountain playing in the midst of them added to the beauty of the scene. The Union Band, which was stationed in the centre of the gardens, played some lively airs during the intervals. The whole of the arrangements did great credit to the liberality and taste of the worthy host, Mr. Munguldass Nathooobhoy, who alone defrayed the expenses of the exhibition. The children, after they had enjoyed the scene, were conveyed home in omnibuses and shigrams at about eight o'clock.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE ARMY.—The Englishman says that more than one London letter received by the last mail mentions the growing belief amongst people well informed as regards Indian military affairs that, notwithstanding Sir Charles Wood's emphatic declaration of last year when he issued his retiring scheme, there will be before long another offer of inducements to the senior officers of the late Company's armies to retire. In the letters to which we refer it is stated that, on the next occasion, the inducements will not be, as on the last, in the shape of increased rates of pension, but that a money bonus will be tendered to officers, accepting which they will retire on the pensions to which they may be entitled under the company's regulations. His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, accompanied by his personal and the headquarters' staff, will embark for Surat in the steamer Berenice to-day, in prosecution of his tour of inspection in Guzerat, Rajpootana, and Malwa. His Excellency will reach Ahmedabad on the 23rd instant, from whence he proceeds to Deesa and Mount Aboo for the purpose of inspecting the new barracks and hospital in course of erection at that sanitarium. From Mount Aboo his Excellency will proceed to Nusseerabad, Neemuch, and Mhow, which will be the furthest extent of his tour. From thence he will return to Bombay, via Asseerghur and Malligaum, reaching the presidency early in March next.

GROSS VALUE OF THE CROPS OF BRITISH INDIA.—If we assume the present gross value of the crops of British India to be about £250,000,000—and it is impossible to believe it less—the assessment that would have been levied thereon, under the rule of our predecessors, would have been £80,000,000 sterling, where we Court Martial.

LIEUT. T. B. BOILEAU, OF THE LATE 4TH EUROPEAN REGT.

Head Quarters, Camp, Hingona, Nov. 22.—At a General Court Martial assembled at Mooltan, on Saturday, the 18th of October, 1862, Lieut. T. B. Boileau, of the late 4th European Regiment, attached to the 101st Royal Bengal Fusilier Regiment of Foot, was arraigned on the following charge:—

Charge.—With conduct to the prejudice of good order and military discipline, in the following instances:—

1st. In having at Mooltan, between the 1st of March and the 7th of July, 1862, been culpably negligent in keeping the accounts of the company under his command, and in the care of the public money entrusted to his charge; in consequence of which neglect, on the date last stated, there was a deficiency of Rs. 3,371-2-9, or thereabouts, of such public money, for which he (Lieut. Boileau) could not account.

2nd. In having, at Mooltan, on the 8th July, 1862, in disobedience of the military regulations, sec. 48, paragraph 17, borrowed Rs. 1,649 from Corporal J. Gorman, of the company, under his (Lieut. Boileau's) command.

Finding.—The Court are of opinion that the prisoner, Lieut. Thomas Boldero Boileau, of the late 4th European Regiment, attached to the 101st Royal Bengal Fusilier Regiment of Foot, is guilty of the charge preferred against him; but the Court find that the amount deficient on the first instance of the charge amounts to Rs. 2,275-6-8.

Sentence.—The Court sentence the prisoner, Lieut. Thomas Boldero Boileau, of the late 4th European Regiment, attached to the 101st Royal Bengal Fusilier Regiment of Foot, to be dismissed the Service.

THE NEW COINAGE.

Financial Department.—No. 23g.

Extract from the proceedings of the Govt. of India, in the financial dept., under the date of October 28, 1862.

RESOLUTION.—H.E. the Gov. gen. in Council observes that the new silver and copper coinage preserves that the new silver of 1862 will come into circulation from the 1st proximo, and that the distinctive appellation of "Company's" rupee in the transactions of the Indian empire will no longer be correct, and may with advantage be allowed to drop.

H.E. in Council is therefore pleased to direct that in all future public correspondence and accounts the word "rupee" only be employed to designate the Government coin of that denomination.

ORDER.—Ordered, that a copy of the above resolution be forwarded for information and guidance to the several departments of the Government of India, to all local governments and administrations, and to all officers of audit and account subordinate to this department.

Ordered also, that the resolution be published in the Calcutta Gazette for general information and guidance.

No. 2 Batty. 21st Brig. R.A.—Capt. J. H. P. Malcolmson, from termination of previous leave to Dec. 31, 1862, m.c.

BY THE COMMANDER IN CHIEF. ABOLITION OF THE ARTILLERY DEPOT OF INSTRUCTION.

Adj. Gen.'s Office, Head Qrs., Poona, Dec. 8.—No. 1,181.—With reference to G.O. No. 1,073, of Oct. 31 last, the final decision of Government having been received for the abolition of the artillery depot of instruction, that establishment will be broken up from this date.

The acting director of the depot will be good enough to retain under his charge such portion of the establishment as may be required to carry on the laboratory work until arrangements are made by the inspector general of ordnance and magazines for providing for the fuze manufactory, the same remaining in charge of Capt. DeVitre.

The models and trophy guns, &c., will be retained, and the laboratory work carried on in the present depot building; all ordnance stores, &c., not required, to be returned into the Poona Arsenal.

No. 1,182.—Pending final orders defining the position and duties of the inspector of artillery, the C. in C. is pleased to lay down the following rules on the subject:—

The inspector of artillery will carry on all correspondence with officers commanding artillery brigades, batteries, or with other officers of artillery subject to his supervision, through his brigade major, to whom these officers will address their communications on subjects connected with the duties of the inspector of artillery.

The inspector of artillery will conduct his correspondence personally with the head quarters of the army, general officers commanding divisions and brigades.

Officers commanding divisions, brigades, or stations will afford immediate compliance with the requisitions of the inspector of artillery for the parade of such portion of the artillery as may be serving under their command for the purpose of inspection.

No. 1,183.—The C. in C. is pleased to declare that leave of absence prep. to furl., whether on private affairs or on sick certificate, must always be general and not privileged leave.

No. 1,184.—Lieut. G. R. Peart, gen. list, paid doing duty officer Central India Horse, is to be borne on and accounted for in the returns, &c., of the 1st Gr. regt. N.I.

No. 1,185.—Asst. surg. F. R. O'Kearney is app. to the medical charge of the sanitarium, Poorundhur.

TELEGRAPH.—The Bombay Government lately brought to the notice of the Supreme Government the urgent necessity which existed for a branch line of telegraph diverging from the main line in the neighbourhood of Dharwar and connecting it through Yellapoor, Sircy, and Coompta with Sedasheghur in the district of North Canara. The Supreme Government agree, as we learn, that it is highly desirable to have this branch line completed before the cotton crop of the coming season is being conveyed down the ghauts for shipment at Compta and Sedasheghur.

It is rumoured that Mr. G. Inverarity, Commissioner of Customs, will shortly be succeeded in the office by Mr. A. D. Robertson.

THE KING OF OUDE.

THE dethroned King of Oude has been petitioning the local Government to pay off his debts, and to exempt his allowance from the Income-tax. He has a large company of followers, of a most disreputable character, upon whom he spends the greater portion of a very princely income; and we hope the Government will not help him to continue to waste money on such a set of scamps.

DEATH OF THE VICEROY OF EGYPT.

THE death of the Viceroy of Egypt is an event that may prove of great importance with reference to our privilege to make Egypt the highroad to our Indian possessions. The late Viceroy, Said Pasha, had received a European education, for which he was chiefly indebted to a Frenchman, who seems to have inspired him with a partiality for France. He yet cherished, however, a profound respect for the English as a powerful and most honest people, and, though he was not a thoughtful man or a close student, he had very liberal opinions for an Asiatic on all great questions of public policy. His private character was not immaculate; and it was, perhaps, on account of his supposed addiction to oriental excesses that he received a somewhat cold reception from certain classes of the English people on his late visit to this country. He will be succeeded by his nephew, Ismail Pasha, who is regarded with some respect by the Europeans in the Levant. He is supposed to be a man of energy and enterprise. Whether he is favourable or not to the Lesseps scheme of cutting the Isthmus of Suez is not known.

THE LATE MR. GREEN.

THE name of Mr. Green, the shipowner, is so familiar to old Indians that the announcement of his death should not be confined to the brief obituaries. He and his younger brother had a fleet of no less than thirty noble ships trading between England and Australia and India, and no private vessels were better found in every respect. As passenger ships they are so truly comfortable, and the cuddy table is so liberally supplied, that even to this day their attractions make them very formidable as rivals to the P. and O. Company's magnificent steamers, in spite of the longer time occupied in a voyage round the Cape. Mr. Green was a most enterprising individual—a genuine specimen of Anglo-Saxon energy and perseverance. He was an extensive shipbuilder, and had constructed steam frigates for many foreign Governments. He warmly supported many public charities connected with the maritime classes. He died on the 17th inst., in his fifty-ninth year.

PAYMENT OF TOLLS BY MINISTERS OF RELIGION.

THE authorities at Colombo lately got into a dilemma. According to the 7th clause of the Ordinance 22 of 1861, or the Toll Ordinance, a power was given to all Government agents acting under immediate orders from Government to exempt from the payment of tolls all Christian ministers travelling on duty. The Buddhist priests felt that this favour to Christian priests was an injustice to all other priests, who were subjects of the same Government, and one of them called upon the Government to explain why he should not enjoy the same privilege. According to the principle of fair play to all, this was a poser. The Government did not like to make an exemption in favour of priests of a false religion, but it could not well urge its objection on that point. In this difficulty its only alternative was to recall the privilege to Christian priests, and to decline granting exemptions from toll to any ministers of any religion whatsoever.

The Government told Christian ministers that it felt certain they would cheerfully forego the privilege of exemption rather than insist upon a departure in their favour exclusively from the principle of toleration and equality of all subjects before the law. The Government agents are informed that they are "so to exercise the discretion vested in them as to decline granting exemptions from toll to any ministers of any religion whatsoever." It is rather an Irish mode of exercising discretion—to obey an order that leaves no discretion at all.

MR. R. D. MANGLES AND MR. BRIGHT.

MR. ROSS DONELLY MANGLES has written a long letter (nearly two columns) to the Times in reply to John Bright's recent speech at Birmingham on the subject of Indian cotton. Mr. Bright is an energetic and well-meaning man, no doubt, but he is no statesman. He has what is called the gift of the gab in great perfection, and always draws a full house wherever he goes and whatever may be his subject. But few public men speak more rashly, or utter more crude opinions with the most arrogant self-confidence. He is especially ill-informed on Indian questions, and peremptory in proportion to his ignorance. It hardly required Mr. Mangles's long argumentation to show his errors. Mr. Bright seems to attribute the fact of the inferiority of Indian cotton to the want of Government aid; but it is odd to find this great advocate for the principles of fair and free trade so strenuous in his recommendation of the extension of Government favour and protection towards one particular branch of commerce or agriculture. The truth is, that if British merchants would look to their own best interests, they would soon encourage the ryots of India to make Indian cotton quite equal in price and quality to that of America. The native agriculturists have abundance of prejudices and superstitions, but in questions of commercial advantages they are sufficiently clear-sighted. Let the Manchester merchants give orders in the cotton-growing districts for a large amount of the best cotton that India can grow, at a moderately remunerative price to the ryots, and they will not be disappointed in their wish to benefit both themselves and their country. The soil of India is wonderfully rich and productive, and labour is as wonderfully cheap. All the aid that is required from Government is the construction of good roads and bridges for the conveyance of merchandise, and the Secretary of State for India assures the British public that this good work is now proceeding with great rapidity, and at a great cost to the Government.

OFFICIAL RECORDS.

LORD MACAULAY long ago expressed his astonishment that the vast mass of official records at the several Presidencies of India should have been turned to so little use, or should have excited so little interest. Piles upon piles of manuscripts have gradually become illegible from the effects of the damp air in the rainy seasons, or have been utterly destroyed by successive generations of rats and white ants. One reason why those records have been so rarely consulted by the historical student is the too well-known fact that the Government of India has wasted more paper than any other Government in the world, and that matters of historical interest or value are so deeply buried in the most voluminous discussions and reports respecting the meanest and most frivolous details, that the search for an historical fragment of any value in such tremendous masses of worthless matter was like hunting for a needle in a bundle of hay. In India, if there should occur in official accounts a mistake of the most trivial nature, such as a pice overcharge in a pay bill, or if the head of some public institution should apply for an additional allowance of eight annas a-month for some additional duty imposed on a menial servant, the matter can only be settled after covering reams of good foolscap paper. The official records of India are but too like the conversation of Gratiano, who speaks "an infinite deal of nothing. His reasons are as two grains of wheat hid in two bushels of chaff; you shall seek all day ere you find them, and when you have found them they are not worth the search." This is the general or predominant character of these documents; but there must be many official reports that have slept for years amidst these multitudinous nothings that may be of almost unspeakable value, not only to the historian of India, but to the student of human nature. Very many valuable papers must have been lost by neglect and accident and the rapacity of vermin and exposure to the influences of the climate, and by wilful destruction during the late mutiny. Before more are lost we hope the Record Committee appointed by Lord Canning to separate the wheat from the chaff—to preserve the one and destroy the other—will have completed this good service to the muse of history. The gentlemen to whom were assigned this vast and laborious task are the Hon. Mr. Erskine, D. H. Macpherson, Colonel Broome, the Rev. J. Cave Browne, and Mr. Sandeman, the Calcutta Presidency Paymaster—all gentlemen of energy and talent, though it was a mistaken economy on the part of the Local Government to omit the appointment of two or three well paid and competent assistants under them to lighten their task, as the present members have all enough, or rather more than enough, work on their hands already in their own special departments. The Rev. J. Long and Mr. Scott Smith were at first also on the Committee, (the latter was the secretary) but both these gentlemen were soon obliged by ill health to leave India, and the Committee are just now at a standstill. We second the suggestion of the Friend of India that a muniment-hall should be selected, and a gentleman of known literary ability should be appointed on a good salary as keeper of the Records, and that Government should invite competent scholars to undertake the calendaring of special periods, and the editing of such important manuscripts as are necessary for the full comprehension of the history of the rise and progress of our Indian administration. Amongst the most interesting and important of the Records of Government in Bengal are a number of minutes on education and other subjects, by Lord Macaulay, written when he was President of the Law Commission and of the Committee of Public Instruction.

MISCELLANEOUS

THE DEATH OF MR. RICHARD GREEN, the eminent shipowner of Blackwall, took place on January 17. The deceased gentleman had been ailing some time, and in order that he might be nearer at hand for his physicians, a few weeks ago he was removed to his sister's residence, in Regent's-park. In the early part of last week his illness assumed a more serious aspect, and it was evident that he was fast sinking. He gradually became more exhausted, and died as before stated. He was in his fifty-ninth year, and, in connection with his younger brother, owned the magnificent fleet of ships, upwards of thirty, which for so many years have traded between the Thames and the East Indian and Australian ports. He was also an extensive shipbuilder, and had constructed numerous steam frigates and other vessels for the English, Russian, Spanish, Portuguese, and Brazilian navies. In him the Merchant Seamen's Orphan Asylum, the Dreadnought Hospital Ship, and other charities connected with the mercantile marine, as also those in the east end of the metropolis, have lost a staunch friend. He contributed towards the maintenance of the chapel and Green's Sailor's Home in the East India-road, originated by his father, and he also established a free school for children, without regard to any particular creed. By his benevolence the Poplar Hospital was enabled to extend its usefulness and to relieve a large amount of suffering humanity. He took a most lively interest in the success of the Merchant Seamen's Orphan Asylum, of which he was treasurer, and subscribed a munificent sum to the fund for erecting the building at Snarbrook, the foundation-stone of which was laid by the late Prince Consort. He took a prominent part in promoting the organisation of the Naval Reserve, and we believe that most of the officers and crews of the firm belong to that branch of the nation's service. He was also chairman of the recently-established training school on board the Worcester ship in the Thames. Although not of very strong health, he was active in his business habits, and, attended by his manager, Mr. Selfe, he would often visit his ships in the adjacent dock twice in the course of the day. On the news of his death reaching Poplar on Saturday afternoon the shipping in the docks had their colours hoisted half-mast high, and the shops were partially closed, the bells of the churches and chapels being tolled during the remainder of the day. The deceased gentleman was never married. The London branch of the Naval Reserve have expressed a desire to follow the remains of their late patron to the tomb. Amongst the many offices held by the late Mr. Green was the post of vice-commander of the Royal Thames Yacht Club.

DEATH OF THE VICEROY OF EGYPT.—The accounts from Alexandria state that the death of the Viceroy of Egypt took place at one o'clock on the morning of the 18th, after nine days' suffering, and that he is succeeded by Ismail Pasha, his nephew, who is about 38 or 40 years of age, and who is favourably regarded both for business talents and economical tendencies. The latter, indeed, are said to be rather too much developed, but, after recent extravagancies, they can scarcely fail to be considered salutary. His Highness is grandson of Mehemed Ali, and the succession of Viceroys has been as follows:—Mehemed Ali, founder of the dynasty; Ibrahim Pasha, his son, who reigned only 80 days; Abbas Pasha, son of Tounoun Pasha, and grandson of Mehemed Ali; and, lastly, Said Pasha, who was son of Mehemed Ali. The new ruler is son of Ibrahim Pasha, and the next in succession to him is Mustafa Pasha, now Minister of Finance in Turkey.

APPOINTMENTS.—(Foreign-office, Jan. 10).—The Queen has been pleased to approve of Mr. Giacomo Sigg as Consul at Bombay for his Majesty the King of Italy. The Queen has also been pleased to approve of Mr. Hippolyte Lemièrre as Consul in the Mauritius for the King of Madagascar. (India-office, Jan. 13).—The Queen has been pleased to appoint Henry Newton, Esq., of the Bombay Civil Service, to be a Judge of the High Court at Bombay.

THE AMOUNT OF SPECIE engaged for transmission to the East by the Ripon yesterday is limited to £130,598, of which £31,700 is for Alexandria, £7,355 for Madras, £50,000 for Calcutta, £21,933 for Hong Kong, £15,610 for Shanghai, and £4,000 for Singapore. £43,055 is gold, and the rest silver.

THE "COLOMBO."—A telegram received by the Peninsular and Oriental Company states that the whole of the mails and the entire cargo have been recovered by Heinke's diving apparatus from the wreck of the Colombo.

INDIA OUTFITS.—NOTICE.

Thresher's India Tweed Suits,
Thresher's Kashmir Flannel Shirts, Thresher's India Gauze Waistcoats,

were invented and are manufactured exclusively by THRESHER and GLENNY, and for which the International Exhibition Medal of 1863; the Exhibition Medal of 1851; and the Madras Medal of 1856 have been awarded.—The high character and universal approval of these articles have led to a number of inferior imitations, all of which are advertised under similar, but triflingly altered names, and therefore, Messrs. THRESHER and GLENNY feel it necessary to announce that the India Gauze Waistcoats, the Kashmir Flannel Shirts, and the India Tweed Suits can only be procured at their establishment.

FIRE! THIEVES!! FIRE!!!

C. H. GRIFFITHS having purchased nearly all the best quality of Fire-proof Safes from the International Exhibition of 1862, including those made by Messrs. Perry, Chatwood, Rhodes, and other eminent makers, is enabled to offer them at half the original cost. The patented improvements of the latter maker render it an impossibility for fire to take any effect under any circumstances of time and place. In consequence of the increasing demand for these essential and valuable repositories, which no house of business, or, indeed, private house (where plate, books, and documents are kept) should be without, in these hazardous and dangerous times.
C. H. G. has taken additional premises, 3, Pentonville-road, opposite the Angel, Islington, where he also intends to keep a variety of Second-hand Safes by those eminent large makers, Milner, Price, Mordan, &c., at half the price of new. Sketches, with prices, free by post.

Old-change, St. Paul's, London; and opposite the Angel,

A LADY who has for many years conducted a superior School will be happy to RECEIVE into her Establishment YOUNG LADIES from India or the Colonies. The system of Education is based on the modern and intelligent plan of cultivating the understanding rather than crowding the memory. To those who value thorough Christian principles, combined with home comforts and a superior education, this Establishment can be highly recommended. Testimonials from ministers and others.

A MARRIED CLERGYMAN, resident at Brighton, RECEIVES a limited number of PUPILS, between the ages of Twelve and Fifteen, who may be destined for the Military and Naval Professions. With a view to this ultimate object, the entire course of Study, from the outset, is regulated expressly in conformity with the requirements of the Examinations at Addiscombe, Sandhurst, Woolwich, and Portsmouth; and every care is taken to direct special attention to those subjects likely to prove professionally useful in the future career of the Naval or Military officer. The Pupils are examined periodically in Mathematics by Professor J. R.
Young, formerly of Belfast College, and Author of "A Course of Mathematics, Pure and Mixed, for the Use of Candidates for the Military and Civil Service Examinations," &c.; and also in Classics and Modern Languages by Scholars of repute.

Prospectuses may be had of Messrs. ALLEN and Co., 13,
Waterloo-place, London, S.W.

MESSRS. WM. H. ALLEN AND CO.'S PUBLICATIONS.

AN INQUIRY into the THEORIES of HISTORY.—CHANCE, LAW, WILL, with Special Reference to the Principles of the Positive Philosophy. 8vo. cloth, 15s.

"This is both an able and an interesting book; for the writer, while an accurate and in some respects an original thinker, has also the command of a clear and animated style. The general scope of the book is the refutation of that naked positivism of which M. Comte is the apostle. . . . Of the whole work we can confidently say that it is one to be read by every man interested in these questions. It is a weighty treatise, and an important contribution to philosophy."—The Press, August 16, 1862.

"Written to combat certain opinions which have lately been gaining ground with some classes of thinkers, this treatise is well-timed. With no more boldness than is proper, the author claims that the views of wise men in former ages shall not be disregarded without good reason, and that nothing new and improved shall be accepted simply because of its impudence. His own language throughout is moderate and logical. A Conservative in principle, it is a part of his conservative belief in the steady progress of mankind to seek for the development of new thoughts in every age of human history, and ready to accept all that bears the stamp of truth. In a book full of argument, and occupying just that border-land of metaphysics which is harder to tread than the defined circle of metaphysics itself, it would be easy to discover discrepancies of thought and contradictions of terms; but the faults are few, and the merits many."—Examiner, Aug. 16, 1862.

A SHORT TRIP in HUNGARY and TRANSYLVANIA in the SPRING of 1862. By Professor D. T. ANSTED. Post 8vo., cloth, 8s. 6d.

"Professor Ansted's descriptions are written with a neatness attesting the accuracy of a scientific observer's eyes. His volume is one both of value and entertainment: a book calculated to turn the thoughts of tourists down the Danube."—Athenæum, Aug. 16, 1862.

"Many a tourist this autumn will have cause to thank Professor Ansted for introducing them to a new and comparatively unknown country. . . . It would be difficult to find a more agreeable companion for a tour than the author of this interesting volume."—The Press, Aug. 9, 1862.

By ALBERT J. BERNATS, Professor of Chemistry and Natural Philosophy, and of Practical Chemistry at St. Thomas's Hospital Medical and Surgical College (late Lecturer on Chemistry and Practical Chemistry at St. Mary's Hospital), &c., &c. Illustrated by several cuts. Post 8vo., cloth, 6s.

MEMORABLE EVENTS of MODERN HISTORY. By J. G. EDGAR. Author of the "Boyhood of Great Men," &c., &c. With Illustrations. Post 8vo., cloth, 6s. 6d.

"A practical writer, with a high sense of his obligations as an instructor of children. Mr. J. G. Edgar never makes a contribution to juvenile literature that does not deserve a certain measure of commendation. We can conscientiously recommend it ('Memorable Events') as a work at the same time entertaining and useful."—Athenæum, March 6, 1862.

"Mr. Edgar's style is clear, vigorous, simple, and unaffected, and from the first page to the last the reader is instinctively conscious of standing in the presence of a gentleman and a scholar. Though writing for the benefit of the rising generation Mr. Edgar possesses the enviable talent of attracting at the same time the attention of young men and grey-heads, and of so describing events as to suggest many a topic for grave reflection. His last ('Memorable Events') is certainly not his least work, and not only confirms but enhances his previous reputation as an earnest, agreeable, high-minded, and reliable chronicler of human achievements and human follies and failures."—Spectator.

"A most acceptable present for the youth of both sexes."—Observer.

THE FORESTS and GARDENS of SOUTH INDIA. By HUGH CLEGG, M.D., F.R.S., Conservator of Forests, Madras Presidency. Post 8vo., with Illustrations, price 12s.

"Full of valuable information and thoroughly reliable in all its statements."—Daily News.

THE HISTORY of CHESS: from the Time of the Early Invention of the Game in India till the Period of its Establishment in Western and Central Europe. By DUNCAN FORBES, LL.D., 8vo., cloth, 15s.

"This volume will be a welcome addition to the library of every lover of the noble game of chess. Our author makes a stout fight for the Hindoos as the inventors of the game, and adduces many cogent proofs in support of his opinion. He shows how the game is played in other countries, how it has been modified both in the names of the pieces and the names of the game by the peculiarities of the country or the national temperaments of the inhabitants; and then traces the steps by which it has arrived at its present place of honour in civilised and intellectual Europe. The book is, therefore, full of curious lore that lean on other and higher subjects than chess-playing, for it involves dissertations on ethnology, comparative ymology, the dispersion and settlement of nations, and the manners and customs of different countries, to a degree that would not be at all anticipated by a person who contented himself by reading the title-page. All this information is given, not in any dry, repulsive, or even technical style, but easily, clearly, and in an animated manner—the style that would naturally be adopted by a gentleman and man of the world."—Herald.

SIN: its Causes and Consequences. An Attempt to Investigate the Origin, Nature, Extent, and Results of Moral Evil. A Series of Lent Lectures. By the Rev. HENRY CHRISTMAS, M.A., F.R.S. Post 8vo., cloth, 6s. 6d.

"These lectures are learned, eloquent, and earnest, and though they approach the 'limits of religious thought,' they do not transgress those limits; and they present the reader with comprehensive review, based upon revelation, of the nature, extent, and consequences of moral evil or sin, both in this world and in the world to come."—Civil Service Gazette.

A COURSE of ELEMENTARY MATHEMATICS, for the Use of Candidates for Admission into either of the Military Colleges; of Applicants for Appointments in the Home or Indian Civil Service; and of Mathematical Students generally. 2nd Edition. In one closely printed 8vo. volume. Pp. 648. Price 12s.

"In the work before us he has digested a complete Elementary Course by aid of his long experience as a teacher and a writer; and he has produced a very useful book. . . . Mr. Young has not allowed his own tastes to rule the distribution, but has adjusted his parts with the skill of a veteran."—Athenæum, March 9, 1861.

"Mr. Young is well-known as the author of undoubtedly the best treatise on the 'Theory of Equations' which is to be found in our language—a treatise distinguished by originality of thought, great learning, and admirable perspicuity. Nor are these qualities wanting in the work which we are reviewing. . . . Considering the difficulty of the task which Mr. Young has undertaken to discharge, and the extent of useful knowledge he has succeeded in imparting accurately and lucidly in so small a compass, we can without hesitation commend this work to the public as by far the best elementary course of mathematics in our language."—The London Review, April 6, 1861.

THE RUSSIANS AT HOME: Unpolitical Sketches, showing what Newspapers they read; what Theatres they frequent; and how they Eat, Drink, and Enjoy themselves; with other matter relating chiefly to Literature, Music, and to Places of Historical and Religious Interest in and about Moscow. By SUTHERLAND EDWARDS, Esq. 2nd Edition, with Illustrations. Price 10s. 6d.

"It is a book that we can sincerely recommend, not only to those who are desirous of abundant and reliable information respecting the social economy of the Russian people, but to those who seek an entertaining volume, that may be perused in any part with both profit and amusement."—Edinburgh Evening Courant.

"This is not only one of the most amusing books that we have read for a long time, but also the best and most reliable account of Russian life and manners which has hitherto been given to the public."—Spectator.

"The tone is so genial, the descriptions are so vigorously touched, and the author's perfect acquaintance with his subject is so marked throughout, that his sketches are sure to delight any one into whose hands they may fall."—Literary Gazette.

HISTORY of the BRITISH EMPIRE in INDIA, by EDWARD THORNTON, Esq., containing a copious Glossary of Indian Terms, and a complete chronological index of Events. The whole in one closely-printed 8vo. volume, price 12s.

Students who have to pass an examination on the History of India will find Mr. Thornton's the best and cheapest volume to consult, for whilst it is a complete and comprehensive History, the style is lively and interesting, a great contrast with all other Histories of India.

A GAZETTEER of INDIA compiled from Documents at the India-office, and other official returns made in India. By EDWARD THORNTON, Esq. In one large closely-printed 8vo volume, with Map, price £1. 1s.

THE LIBRARY EDITION of the above Work in four vols. 8vo., with Maps showing the acquisitions of the British at various periods, Notes, and marginal References, may still be had, price £2. 16s.

THE INDIAN ARMY and CIVIL SERVICE LIST for January, 1863. Issued by order of the Secretary of State for India. 12mo, sewed, 6s., or by post, 6s. 6d.; bound copies, 7s. 6d.; or by post, 8s.

THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY of MISS CORNELIA KNIGHT, Lady Companion to the Princess Charlotte of Wales, with Extracts from her Journals and Anecdote Books. Fourth Edition, 2 vols., 8vo., cloth, £1. 6s.

"Why we should turn to these volumes as among the most interesting of the recent season, will be sufficiently evident as we indicate their contents."—Times.

"Of the popularity of these volumes, on account of their historical as well as gossiping merits, there can be no doubt whatever."—Athenæum.

THE HISTORY of the OPERA, from MONTEVERDE to DONIZETTI. By SUTHERLAND EDWARDS. Second Edition, 2 vols., 8vo., cloth, price £1. 1s.

"Completely master of his subject, and possessing a ready and pleasing pen, Mr. Edwards in these volumes gives us an exceedingly interesting history of operatic performances."—Herald.

"It is one of those treasures of amusing anecdote that may be taken up and laid down at a minute's notice."—Times.

THE REPUBLIC of FOOLS: being the History of the State and People of Abderia in Thraee. Translated from the German of C. M. von Wieland. By the Rev. H. CHRISTMAS. 2 vols., post 8vo., cloth, 18s.

"As a prose satire, 'The History of the Abderites' yields only in breadth of humour, and pungency of wit, to Dean Swift's immortal travels of Captain Lemuel Gulliver, and of works of that class we know of none in any language that can compare with either of the two."—Observer.

"Here is enjoyment for many a Christmas to come, for many thousands of English boys, and many thousands of English men and women. Unfortunately for the world Plautus Caxton departed this life without having made any contribution towards the great history of human folly, save, indeed, by the records of his own. Mr. Christmas has given us something even better in his translation of Wieland's Abderites; and in the simplest, most racy, and vernacular English, has enriched our literature with another character of the family dear to mankind, of the Quixotes, Gullivers, and other human foils of human self-love and vanity. If the addition to our shelves of a book to delight the young and instruct the old overflowing with wit, fun, drollery, inexhaustible wisdom, depth, and knowledge is an achievement deserving of national thanks, we undertake to convey our share to Mr. Christmas, fearing only lest we should not have thanked him sufficiently."—London Review.

THE CODE of CRIMINAL PROCEDURE: An Act passed by the Legislative Council of India on the 5th September, 1861. 8vo., cloth, 10s. 6d.

MANUAL of MILITARY LAW for all Ranks of the Army and Militia: together with an Abstract of the Volunteer Acts. By Colonel J. K. PIPON, Assistant Adjutant-General at head-quarters, and J. F. COLLIER, Esq., of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law. 2nd Revised Edition, pocket-size, 3s. 6d.—By post, 3s. 8d.

"This Manual, which is approved by the Commander-in-Chief, is portable in form, and should be in the hands of all soldiers and riflemen."—Athenæum.

BY DAVID THOMAS ANSTED, M.A., F.R.S., &c.

AND

ROBERT GORDON LATHAM, M.A., M.D., F.R.S., &c.

The Illustrations drawn on Wood expressly for the Work, by PAUL J. NAPTEL, Member of the London Society of Painters in Water Colours.

"The 'Channel Islands' is an excellent book of its class—well conceived, well written, well illustrated, well printed. It is the produce of many hands, and every hand a good one. Nearly every thing which a man can desire to know about Jersey, Guernsey, Alderney, and Sark—about their history, Geography, and natural history—Professor Ansted and Dr. Latham have contrived to tell. Altogether the contents of the volume are as varied and interesting as a well-sustained drama; and to this drama no more graceful and picturesque scenery could have been furnished than we find in the illustrations so profusely given by artists worthy of the subject and equal to their worth—Paul Nafel and M. Petere Le Lièvre. The result is not a merely handsome volume of the old 'Keepsake' style, made to sell and be looked at, but a book of rare merit and value, made for instruction and delight, to be read with pleasure and to be referred to with profit."—Athenaeum, Nov. 15, 1862.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE present mail brings us nothing of vital interest; scarcely anything, indeed, that is not little more than a repetition, by way of comment and amplification, of what we received by the last mail. The most interesting novelty is the announcement of the opening of the East Indian Railway, from Calcutta to Benares, on the very day of the mail's departure from Bengal. 500 miles of line was to be opened that day for passengers, and a few days after for goods' traffic. Orders have been given by Government to make the railway available as soon as possible for the transit of troops. The East Indian Railway will cause the small station of Howrah to be a place of much importance. It will now rapidly grow into a town of magnitude, almost rivalling the City of Palaces. It has even already, as one of the Calcutta papers says, become to Calcutta what Birkenhead is to Liverpool. The Christmas holiday-keepers in Calcutta were rejoicing at the prospect of a pleasant trip for change of air by the new line.

The Landholders' and Commercial Association, and the indigo planters in general, are greatly excited by what they seem to regard as Lord Elgin's too great readiness to bow submissively to the great Potentate of Westminster, and the report is that they intend to petition Parliament for his removal, or at least the curtailment of his privilege of interference with local details. But the fact is, that a very different sentiment on the subject of the lately proposed Contract system is likely to prevail in England from that which obtains in India. There is here a generous disposition to lean to the side of the natives as the weaker party, and a greater respect for abstract justice than is likely to be exhibited by Englishmen in immediate contact with the people of India, whose habits and manners are so totally different from ours. No doubt the roguery, and falsehood, and laziness of the poor unlettered ryots, who have not had the advantages of improving the conscience or moral sense enjoyed by their British employers, must often terribly try the temper of men who have some sense of honour and some self-respect, but we are not likely to elevate the Hindoo agriculturists by over-severity and injustice, and no Englishman at home would think it right to propose a law to treat the breach of civil contracts criminally.

Sir Charles Trevelyan will have no reason to complain of his reception in India. On the 22nd of December there was a large meeting in the People's Park at Madras, in which the programme of the great meeting to be held in his honour on his arrival was prepared with great care and precision, and a copy of the address was adopted. We give the address and the resolutions in another column. Sir Charles is expected to arrive at Calcutta about the middle of this month, when he is sure to make a great sensation, and to meet with a most cordial reception.

The commercial treaty obtained by Colonel Phayre from the King of Burmah has been a great deal discussed in the Indian papers, and is very generally approved. It was signed at Mandalay on the 10th of November. Colonel Phayre was decorated on the occasion with the high Burmese Order of the Golden Chain; and the Roman Catholic Bishop (Bigandet), who happened to be present, was presented oddly, yet appropriately, with a golden cross. We are to have a consul at Mandalay to keep the Burmese to their agreement.

We may illustrate the dulness of Madras from the fact that the Overland Athenæum commences its summary with an account of the weather, the fall of rain being greater than usual. The weather and the preparations for the reception of Sir Charles Trevelyan have engrossed the attention of the local public.

Sir William Denison is still somewhat unpopular, negatively rather than positively. He is in direct contrast with Sir Charles Trevelyan, who never tires of public work.

With him, indeed, the labour he delights in physics pain. But there is a general complaint against Sir William Denison that he is a sort of King Log.

The rules for the sale of waste lands in the Central Provinces are generally well approved of. The upset price is from eight annas to one rupee, and two rupees eight annas, according to the district. In six districts the maximum area of lots is fixed at 5,000 acres, and in the remaining eleven at 3,000. Here are cheap land estates!

We are glad to see that the wretch Heracop, the murderer of the lamented Mr. Manson, has at last been caught, after having been hunted for in vain for four years. Better late than never. It is well that we have so often succeeded in showing that it is not easy for the murderers of English officers to escape justice. Sooner or later it is pretty sure to overtake them.

The native chiefs of Rajpootana have subscribed £5,000 for the relief of the manufacturing districts of the North of England, which they have paid over to General Lawrence, the political agent, for transmission to this country. The whole presidency of Madras did not subscribe much more than this. The sum raised in Calcutta was £24,000.

It will be an interesting fact to many of our Indian readers that a marshal of France (Canrobert) was married on the 20th to a daughter of a late captain of the Indian army (Allen Ronald Macdonald) at the chapel of the British Residency in Paris, and afterwards at the chapel of the Senate in the Palace of the Luxembourg.

The formation of a rifle corps at Behar, called the Behar Mounted Rifle Corps, has been sanctioned by Government.

We find by a Bengal Government Order (of the 11th of Dec.) that the Calcutta circle of issue of the paper currency was to be extended from the 1st of this month to the division of Assam and the districts of Cachar and Sylhet.

The difficulties of navigation in the river Hooghly are becoming greater every day. Captain Reddie proposed to force more water into the river from above during the rains, and thus to increase the strength of the currents and to move the sands. But Lieutenant-colonel Strachy, Secretary to the Government of India in the Public Works Department, has made a report on the subject of the improvement of the River Hooghly, in which he expresses an opinion that Captain Reddie's must be set aside altogether. He thinks that, whatever might be its effect on the upper parts, it would rather injure than improve the mouth of the river. One Suggestion of Captain Reddie's he approves of—namely, the employment of a certain kind of large rake fixed to the bottom of a steamer, to stir up the silt and help the current to carry it away. The Governor-General has sanctioned this project, somewhat modified, but has very earnestly insisted that the cost of it should be kept within very moderate limits, and that in the first instance the whole experiment should be on a small scale and confined to a small portion of the river. Instead of the rake, as was at first proposed, it was subsequently agreed to try the effect of a set of skeleton barrels, of about five feet in diameter, with iron teeth dragged along the bottom of the river by a steamer.

During the year 1862 the Coolie emigration from India to the British West India colonies, according to a report from the Emigration-office, submitted to the Duke of Newcastle, amounted to 10,880, of whom 9,855 were from Calcutta and 1,025 from Madras. The proportion of females was 27·06 per cent.

A railway has been suggested to be laid down between Calcutta and Diamond Harbour, but the Governor-General does not seem disposed to give it his immediate sanction. His Excellency in Council has resolved, in cases of railways assisted by Government, to retain the power of purchase, and claim the usual right of a ground landlord to re-enter on the land given free of cost, with all buildings and fixtures, at the end of the term of occupation of ninety-nine years; and even a like power of re-entry is to be secured in case of a breach of contract on the part of a railway company. These are rather hard terms, and place the company's interests entirely at the mercy of the Government. The Government declares itself quite disposed to co-operate cordially with the Calcutta and South-Eastern Railway Company in giving the project of a railway to the Mutlah every chance of success, but nothing is to be allowed to deprive the commerce of Calcutta of any possible resources for its expansion of relief that now exists, or may hereafter be suggested. The Calcutta terminus of the Mutlah line must almost of necessity be the terminus of any line of railway for communication with any port on the lower part of the Hooghly, and therefore the Government is anxious to prevent any company from obtaining a practical power to close the lower reaches of the Hooghly against railway communication with Calcutta.

"For 20 acres altogether the price of the land is Rs. 250. I and my superintendent have been five times to—about this land, incurring an expense of Rs. 160 about it, which will run up the cost of the land to Rs. 400 odd. But we have got it cheap. A. B. has just paid Rs. 400 for 5½ acres, besides an additional hundred to the man who made the transfer for him."—Private letter to the editor of the Times of India.—Neilgherries, Dec. 8.

While the Ceylon Government, as will be seen from the above extract, is obtaining an average price of £5 per acre for the waste lands of that island, it is the height of statesmanship, we are told, for the Indian Government to make a present of its wastes to all comers at Rs. 5; waste lands of the very same order, in private hands, being readily saleable at Rs. 20 to Rs. 50. Under Lord Canning's Resolution the Messrs. Barry and Co. have become absolute proprietors of the Madartollah estate, 20,399 acres of tea land in Assam, for the magnificent sum of £10,000. The value of these lands is only just beginning to be generally known, when the Government of the country in its grand impatience of standing in the way of enterprise, offers to settle them upon the first applicant at a tithe of their real worth. By Lord Canning's Resolution, Messrs. Barry and Co. become proprietors of this immense estate for the sum of £10,000. Under the Ceylon Government they would have had to pay £100,000 for it. Sir Charles Wood, dragged reluctantly at the heels of this folly, will not do more than sanction the putting up of the land to auction at an upset price of Rs. 5 per acre, when a shriek is got up by the landholders of Calcutta—echoed, we are ashamed to say, by Mr. Laing—that the Maharajah of Westminster is an obstacle to all progress in the country, and must be forthwith removed out of the way. We know not whether this party, or the Government that deferred to it, merit the contempt of the country the more.

What does the sale of that estate to Messrs. Barry and Co. at a tenth of its value mean, but that the interests of the commonwealth to that extent have been sacrificed for the benefit of Messrs. Barry and Co.? Not content, moreover, with their singular good fortune, they exclaim against the imposition of any land-tax upon their property. They warn us that we must take the tax off their land, or that we shall "check enterprise" again. The carrying on of the Government during the last twelve or eighteen months of Lord Canning's reign, in deference to the representations of such men, afforded an example we trust never to see repeated in this country.

It is no excuse for Lord Canning's government to tell us that it was ignorant of the facts we have succeeded in bringing to light in this controversy. The authors of the resolution of Oct. 17, 1861, may plead, and no doubt honestly plead, that they were not aware that the coffee lands of Wynaad were worth thirty rupees the acre, or the coffee lands of Ceylon worth fifty rupees. They may plead, and no doubt honestly, that they were not aware how small a proportion of the produce of the soil the land tax really absorbed; and that so light was the assessment that the thirty years' leases, under the new survey settlements, were everywhere commanding the extravagant premiums which they now know them to bear. But what does all this prove but the truth of our complaint, that in deference to the selfish clamour got up upon this subject, and without any exact acquaintance with the facts of our condition, the Government of Lord Canning struck out its famous Resolution, from an unworthy fear to be left behind the times?

We have been brought by that resolution to the verge of a disaster almost unparalleled in the history of any people, and we cannot contemplate the danger, from which we have barely escaped, without indignation at the course that was followed. The application of these strictures to the Governor of this Presidency is obvious. If Sir Bartle Frere will but school himself to indifference to public opinion, he will become a model Governor. He was the great sinner throughout the last eighteen months of Lord Canning's rule, and his error sprang from attaching undue weight to popular opinion. We would not have Sir Bartle Frere indifferent to that opinion, but we would see him far less susceptible than he is to its influence. The very first quality of a statesman, as of every other man, is simple-minded regard to duty. In this respect Sir Bartle Frere contrasts most unfavourably with Sir J. P. Grant, the closing days of whose administration were cruelly embarrassed by the ascendancy of unworthy counsels in Lord Canning's cabinet. If ever statesman deserved steady support in difficulty that statesman was Sir J. P. Grant; and it will remain a blot upon the close of Lord Canning's career that he did not receive it. Sir J. P. Grant was sacrificed that the respectable "associations" of Calcutta might be propitiated. Sir Bartle Frere has an opportunity in this Presidency of redeeming a character which has suffered a good deal in the eyes of observant men from its subserviency to the cliques that ruled Calcutta. The personal qualities of his Excellency are such that he must achieve popularity if he will only not strive after it. Let him lay himself out for it, however, and he will end by losing the respect of all parties. It was unworthy of Sir Bartle Frere the other day to support the exclusion of the native pleaders from the Small Cause Court, and of his own order from the Small Causes Court Bench. Small as these matters are, they are observed; and they indicate the temper of a man's mind more accurately perhaps than greater ones. The mistake made in both these cases was ludicrously set before the public in the subsequent claim of "the doctors" of Bombay. Five-sixths, probably, of all classes, official and non-official, are now of one mind that the course followed with that Small Causes Court Bill was narrow and unworthy. Sir Bartle Frere will certainly make shipwreck of his reputation if he shows himself indisposed to stem outside opinion merely because it happens to be strong. Englishmen, as well as natives, like a strong government, and government by associations is incompatible with that. We have been brought by Sir Bartle Frere's susceptibility into great danger already. It is the one weak point in an otherwise almost faultless character. Let the Governor of this Presidency strive simply to deserve public applause, instead of pursuing it, and he will be the model Governor of his times.—Times of India, Dec. 18.

"FRASER" ON OPIUM.

The ignorance of England on Indian subjects is frequently ludicrous, but it occasionally becomes both dangerous and irritating. We have all laughed at "the ferocious charge of dhoolies," and at Mr. Layard's heart-breaking exposure of the evils of our resumption-of land system—that his very palanquin bearers appealed to him beseechingly with the word "Inam" on their lips instead of salaam. Only the other day a leading London weekly, writing on the court of Hyderabad and its ceremonial, headed the article "the King of Nizam," and the penny paper, which has the largest Tory circulation, spoke of the Punjab as being in Lahore. The mistakes made by the only section of English society which cares for India for its own sake, the religious party, are sometimes painful to its members in this country. Not to speak of the utterly unpractical and unimportant question of the Bible in schools, to which so much importance is attached, while the great matter of grants-in-aid of education is left untouched, we have the mistakes made on the subject of Indian opinion. Some four months ago we received a large hand-bill from a friend in England, who implored us to tell him if its statements were based on truth. This proved to be an article extracted from the leading religious daily paper in Scotland, adopting all the myths of a Calcutta paper on the subject of infanticide and oppression in the opium districts, and ascribing them to a Madras journal. On these exaggerations an eloquent appeal was made to the Christian world of Great Britain to rouse itself, and this paper, in hand-bill form, was scattered far and wide. No notice has since been taken by the same parties of the results of the official inquiry instituted by the Bengal Government, and conducted with so much fairness and honesty.

Now, this opium question is so serious in itself as to render it a cause of regret to all good men that the religious party at home should not be more careful as to their facts. They rush to extremes. Not content with condemning, and justly, the indigo system of Lower Bengal, they would keep planters out of the country altogether. Not satisfied with an exposure of the Government monopoly of opium cultivation in India, they would forbid the State to take any revenue from the accursed thing. While they clamour at home, and justly, for an increase to the excise duties up to the limit which would tempt smuggling, so as to diminish drunkenness, they would use the force of law to stop the growth of opium in India altogether. In the face of the most overwhelming evidence, and forgetting that opium will be used in China whether we supply it or not, they will not admit that the evil of opium-smoking in the East is far less than that of gin and whiskey-drinking at home, and that a natural and lawful crave here, as there, exists for a stimulant which, if not supplied by opium, will find something else. For ourselves we regret, while we cannot condemn and would not prevent, the growth of opium, just as we bewail all other abuses. But the evil to which alone, or, at least to which at first, all philanthropists have to direct their assaults, is the Government monopoly of the cultivation.

Hence we welcome a writer in the October number of Fraser, who urges the same reform which three months ago we enforced by facts and figures so startling as to lead the North-West Government to ask the Government of India to take up the question. This writer makes the mistake, common to all Indian dogmatists, of supposing that because he has personal experience of one province of India he knows all the rest. Principles are doubtless the same everywhere, but facts are very different, and this writer's misrepresentations of the opium system in Bengal are somewhat gross. He does himself and India the wrong of mistaking facts in the month of October, which an official enquiry by the Bengal Government in the month of June proved to be false or exaggerated. He is the same writer who, when condemning the non-regulation provinces from his experience in the assigned districts, spoke of the North-West as non-regulation; and who applied to the existing planters of Lower Bengal, the condemnation pronounced on the civilian planters of the East India Company half a century ago. Hence, wrong in his facts, he draws a monstrously untrue deduction, representing the greatest evil of the Bengal opium system as this—that it confiscates the opium crop of the ryot. We have travelled through the opium districts referred to, we have conversed with officials of very opposite opinions who have spent years there, we have read all that has been written on the subject; and we declare that, whatever may be or may have been the oppression of the ryot by middlemen, the crop is always popular so long as Government pays well for it. At the present moment, at the very time when the peasants were said to be selling their children to repay advances, the mere increase of payment to Rs. 5 a seer made the crop so desirable that zemindars prepared to cultivate the poppy on their own lands. If it is confiscation to pay the ryot £25 for a chest of opium which sells at £135, it is equally so for the planter who buys the indigo plant, or for the capitalist who purchases any raw material and sells it at an enormous price as the fruit of his skill. We might as well call the late paper duty or the present soap and excise duties confiscation. It is an admitted fact that now the crop is not only voluntary but popular, and that oppression is reduced to a minimum.

The evil is in the Government monopoly, which is opposed alike to the doctrines of free-trade and of morality, while the system is financially most unsound. Let the members of Government read this article in Fraser and see to what an amount of misrepresentation, as well as of most justly-deserved moral denunciation, they expose the English name and the Christian profession in India. We quote almost the only passage in the article free from exaggeration and misstatement:—

"If, instead of maintaining a monopoly which stands upon no precedent, we were content to fix a heavy export duty, the whole system would be changed for the better. The face of the country would be relieved from a swarm of spies and overseers, who worry and distress the ryot beyond all endurance. The Government would receive its proper dues from merchants, who would buy and sell in an open market with the knowledge that an export duty would be levied upon their goods. The Government, ceasing to have a direct interest in the growth of the poppy, need not undertake the questionable duty of fostering the cultivation of a poisonous drug, or maintaining a contraband trade. It would be restored to its proper position as a protector of its own subjects, and as an observer of international law. If the Government supposes that the cultivation of opium would cease or much diminish when the pressure from above were taken off, we are bound to say that we fear, and in like manner the Government might hope, that this would not happen. The supply of opium would be equal to the demand, following an universal rule; in the same way as, unfortunately, the supply of ardent spirits is always equal to the demand. But the altered position of the Government would relieve it from the infamy of the trade; and the incidence of the tax, which would fall upon the merchant, would release the ryot from the tyranny of overseers, and leave him free to grow opium, sugar, or rice, as best suited his views, and in his own way."

All this we said months ago, and the feeling on the subject is becoming so strong in certain quarters that, if the Calcutta authorities do not take the advice of the North-West Government, and act on the experience of Sir Robert Hamilton, they may be put in the undignified position of being ordered to do so. The objection, that to break up the monopoly, as is now being done in the case of salt, would be to poison all India by letting the plant grow anywhere, is baseless, for it would be the duty of the State to restrict the area of the growth, say, to its present limits. We know what the Assamese were till the culture of the poppy was prevented. If an export duty, as in Bombay, with a corresponding excise duty as at present for local consumption, be established in Bengal, so as to yield at least the present revenue, our finances will be stable, our peasantry contented, and our free-trade professions in the matter of cotton and indigo will be proved not to be hypocrisies. Above all, in the eyes of Europe, of China, and of our own subjects, as well as in our own conscience, we shall be relieved of the moral responsibility which now is the only blot on the fair fame of a Government that for philanthropy, righteousness, and a high benevolent aim, is without a parallel in history.—Friend of India.

PESHAWUR AND THE AFGGHANS.

A most interesting report is that lately issued by the Punjab Government on the settlement of the Peshawur District by Major Hugh R. James, C.B. It begins with a detailed geographical description of the valley, with its rivers, rich plains, and barren hills. Then comes a well-considered resumé of the history of the valley from the earliest times to the annexation. After that we have an account of the several tribes inhabiting the district as well as the adjoining hills, which includes, besides the nature of the tenures within British territory, many points of considerably more than mere local or official interest.

The report traces the possession of the valley by the Rajput race of Yadu, the progenitors of the troublesome Jadoons of the present day, 800 years before Alexander made his appearance in these regions. Its meteor-like course left traces in the Græco-Bactrian dynasties which succeeded him, and in the coins of the latter, which have been brought to light in thousands during the last twenty years, and specimens of which may now be seen in the Peshawur Museum. After the Greeks came the Buddhists, who left, as witnesses to their state of civilisation, those topos, ruined viharas or convents, and clusters of mounds, with an inscription here and there at bare intervals, to puzzle the learned labourers of the Asiatic Society. Indo-Scythians and Indians by turns then held the country, but Buddhism continued to prevail until late into the seventh century, and even longer. For the next century and a half it was now under a Lahore, now under a Delhi chief. From the time of Sabaktagin Peshawur became the scene of fierce contests. During the eleventh century it continued a province of Ghuzni "under the numerous successors of Mahmood, and, under the later princes of that line, acquired greater importance, becoming, as it were, the centre of their dominions, which then extended to Lahore, to which place the Royal residence had been transferred." Timur's invasion of India, in December, 1398, did not disturb Peshawur or the tribes about it, as he marched from Cabul to Bunnoo, where he crossed the Indus. The valley and the hills around it changed masters about this time; some of the Western tribes of Affghans driving out other Pathans from these regions who had been in possession of them previously, though there is very good reason to believe that some of these conquerors were only returning to fields which belonged to their ancestors centuries before. To Baber's advance, early in the sixteenth century, they offered for a long time the stoutest resistance, until 1519, when after having plundered the Yusufzais and Mahomedzais, he erected a fort at Peshawur, and left a garrison there. Baber's subsequent invasions of India did not affect the tribes about Peshawur, but they took the opportunity of his continued absence to withhold their tribute, and to revert to their plundering habits. The Dilazaks destroyed the fort at Peshawur shortly before Baber's death, in 1530. More than twenty years afterwards it was rebuilt by Humayun, and the valley remained, now nominally, now really, under the Moguls until, after an anarchical interregnum in the time of Nadir, the Doorani dynasty was established by Ahmed Shah Abdali in 1747. The modern history of the valley is but too well known.

The narrative in the Report, however, is not thus continuous. It is varied by episodes of considerable interest, such as a brief description of the rise and fall of the Raushani sect, an appreciative tribute to the great poet and warrior, Khushhal Khan Khatak, and much minute political detail. Here is a small landscape of Affghan village scenery:—

"Emerging from wild and craggy defiles, with a solitary tower here and there perched upon the overhanging rocks, the stranger comes suddenly upon the village site; springs of refreshing clearness pass from rocky cisterns to the brook which had repeatedly crossed his path in the defile, and which is here fringed with rows of weeping willow, and edged with brightest sward. The village is half hid from view with overshadowing mulberry and poplar trees, the surrounding fields enamelled with a profusion of wild flowers and fragrant with aromatic herbs. At some distance is seen a wood of Thom and Tamarisk, in which are the graves of the village forefathers; an enclosing wall of stone, and the votive sheds which are suspended from the overhanging tree, pointing out the "Tyarat" of some saintly ancient, which children pass with awe and old men with reverence. The dream of peace and comfort, which the contemplation of such scenes suggest, is, however, rudely dispelled by the armed ploughman, who follows his cattle with a matchlock slung at his back; by the watchtower occupied by a party of men to guard the growing crops, and by the heaps of stones visible in all directions, each of which marks the spot of some deed of blood. We cease, indeed, to be surprised at the love of home, which is so marked a feature of the Affghan character; for, reared in a little world of his own, the associations of his childhood must make a more than ordinary impression on his mind; but we might expect that such spots would engender other feelings than those which lurk in the breast of the robber and assassin."

The Report, as might be expected, is full of tales of blood and the most cruel treachery, when it comes to describe the internal history and politics of the different tribes and clans, and the violent changes of their chiefships. Yet, on the whole, Major James is unable to repress a certain admiration of the character of the Affghans, when he speaks of their hospitality or their jovial carelessness. "The hospitality for which Affghans are notorious is carried to such extremes as to cripple their means of paying the revenue. An unlimited supply of beds, blankets, and food is the mark of a true Affghan Mullik; one who resorts to economical arrangements in his household is lightly esteemed, however excellent his character may be in other respects; so also is the Mullik who keeps food of two qualities—the superior for his own use, the inferior for that of his guests." "The Affghans are a joyous people, and the wealthier classes much addicted to field sports, chiefly hawking. Festive gatherings are frequent either at the shrines of popular saints, or at central places where such meetings are held periodically, and where people seem to come together, not to buy or sell, or even to quarrel, but simply to make a noise and be happy. Tilting, shooting at a mark, racing and wild music relieve the monotony; whilst the boisterous groups of children and young lads that are seen at these fairs, as well as in the villages, are a sure indication that this happiness is not merely a holiday garb, but attends the Affghan in his home, be he peasant or noble."

Major James pronounces his adherence to the opinion that the Affghans were the children of Israel. He cites Dr. Trumpp and the Rev. J. Loewenthal as holding an opposite view, but he appears to be mistaken when he supposes their conclusion to be based "chiefly" on considerations of language. Much assistance as ethnology derives from linguistics, the latter alone cannot determine the question as to the origin of a people. Major James himself does much to invalidate his own position when, quoting from the Rev. J. Loewenthal, he shows that the Pathans existed in their present localities under the same name at least 500 years B.C. When speaking of their claim to be considered Israelites, he cites their own books, all quite modern, and almost confessedly fabrications, and says of them:—"The narrative of these events exhibits much that is inconsistent, and much that we know from other and authentic sources to be erroneous and impossible, devised probably to give to their nation an honourable link in the annals of Mahomedanism, and to account for peculiarities in their present circumstances and character." The only arguments which we can find him adducing as favouring his view of the question are, first, "the number of Hebrew names" found among them. Than this delusion cannot be greater. There is absolutely not one Hebrew name to be found among the Affghans. There are numerous Arabic names, of course, but these the Affghans have in common with all Mahomedans. Those names which are current among them, and are found also in the Bible, they know only in their Arabic and not in their Hebrew form—that is, they have them from the Koran, not from the Bible. Of the very name of their fabled progenitor, King Saul, they are totally ignorant, which would be out of the question if the slightest authority were due to their genealogies. They know the Hebrew Achilles, as he is represented in the Koran, and is there called Talut, a name manufactured for a special reason. From this Talut they claim to be descended, a claim decisive as to the fact that it could not originate before they became acquainted with the Koran. On the other hand, there is not a single "Hebrew name" among them which is not to be found in the Koran. The punishment of death, by stoning, is another custom which points to an Israelitish origin. This argument he invalidates himself immediately by giving a very good reason for the custom apart from its being Israelitish. He says:—"In the hands of an Afreedie the stone is a formidable weapon, and is that most frequently employed in their petty village frays." This custom, moreover, has so little that is peculiar that in the early stages of civilisation it has been found among the Greeks, the Spaniards, the Persians, and the Germans, as well as among many savage nations. The only other argument which we can find is where Major James adduces a custom "similar to the law of the scapegoat (Numbers XVI.) In times of severe pestilence, when the visitation is looked upon as a Divine judgment for the sins of the people, a goat or calf is taken and brought before a solemn assembly, where the chief Moolahs lay their hands upon its head and turn it loose in the desert." This, however, is also sometimes done when an individual is very ill. It is a purely Hindu custom, and is the origin of the Brahmini bulls met with in Hindu neighbourhoods. These animals are let loose after as well as before death, though the admixture of Islam seems to have restricted the idea among the Affghans to that of a sacrifice or substitute. Sometimes among the latter, where there is wealth, the substitute or "scapegoat" is a slave.

The whole question is a very large one, and much might be said by an ingenious advocate in favour of the descent of the Affghans, or, indeed, of any other nation on earth, from the Israelites. But there are twentyfold more numerous and weighty reasons, which cannot be mentioned here, for believing the Affghans to be only the descendants of Rajputs.—Friend of India.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE AT LAHORE.—LAHORE, Dec 15.—A Christian conference will assemble here during the next week to discuss measures for the further extension of Christianity in India, and of preaching the word of God in places where it has not yet been taught or heard. The Punjab contains, as doubtless most of your readers are aware, a large number of influential men, known not merely as strenuous advocates of missions, but who are enthusiastic in the cause. The conference will be attended by all these, and presided over by Mr. D. F. McLeod, C.B., Financial Commissioner. Among the most prominent of those who are expected to take part in the conclave are Sir H. B. Edwardes, Sir Robert Montgomery, Rev. Mr. Foreman, Mr. Cust, &c. I am not aware of the precise nature of the subjects which will be brought under discussion, but from the known views of the parties I anticipate something highly interesting. Most of us have perused Colonel Edwardes' speech delivered in Exeter-hall in 1860, "Our Indian Empire, its Beginning and End," and may look for something similar on this occasion. I think. The Colonel considers India a stewardship that God could not have placed in our hands for nothing. He would never have subjected 200 millions of men to 30 millions, merely to have their roads improved, their canals constructed upon the most scientific principles, their letters being carried by the penny post, their messages flashed by lightning, their erroneous notions of geography corrected; nor even to have their internal quarrels stopped and peace restored, and life in many ways ameliorated. No; there must have been in India some greater want than even these which England was needed to supply, and for which Portugal and France were not found worthy; that the greatest and oldest and saddest of India's wants is religious truth, a revelation of the real nature of the God whom for ages she has been ignorantly worshipping.

SCRIBBLING SATIRES IN ORDER BOOKS.—To the Editor of the Delhi Gazette.—Dear Mr. Editor, A report having reached the brigadier commanding the station, to the effect that some individual or individuals had thought fit to scribble in the Fort Order Book, and pass comments upon certain military functionaries, he convened a meeting of the officers of the European and native infantry regiments stationed at the above-named place, with a view of bringing the offender or offenders to book. One of the officers of the European infantry confessed (all the rest denied) to having written some of the remarks alluded to. Take, for example, the following would-be facetious remark, the substance of which runs thus:—"A Dictionary of the English Language will shortly be published by Captain —. Apply at the Brigade-office without delay, as only a few copies will be struck off." Now to the point. Another officer of the native infantry, on being asked whether he was concerned in the matter, politely declined to answer the question, while the rest of his brother officers denied being implicated in it. He was then admonished in the usual military style, and his commanding officer was requested (or in other words ordered) to make him attend at orderly hours at his (the C. O.'s) quarters every day for the ensuing six months! Added to this, intelligence arrived in the afternoon that Mars' anger was not appeased, and that his victim was to attend drills till further orders. Here is "punishment drill" (awardable only by a court martial) deliberately and unjustifiably imposed upon an officer. Naturally smarting under such a disgrace, he wrote a letter, saying he considered the punishment rather severe, and requested to be tried by a court martial. It is not known whether charges have been preferred against this officer or not, but he has been in arrest over two months.—QUIDNUNC.—Saugor, Dec. 9.

CHRISTMAS IN THE DOON.—The Doon (of Dehra) is not a piece of the Plains; it is a hill-side slipped flat, and lying at the foot of its parent mountain, and combines most of the delights of their English climate. What is that you see along the walls of the church which at once stamps the scene as thoroughly English? Holly, genuine holly! lent by generous Mussoorie to her less fortunate sister. Genuine holly!—no make-believe that owes its existence to human art, but the spontaneous production of a bountiful soil which brings forth all the indigenous productions of old England. And what is that that is carefully intertwined in the holly branches and leaves? It is the mistletoe.

NATIVE MURDERER—FRENCH SUPREME COURT.—It is rather an unusual occurrence for the French Supreme Court to pass sentence of death. The sentence on the Bengali named is quite an event:—"We have been informed that the trial of the unfortunate native, Unnodapersaud Mitter, charged with the wilful murder of a female at Chandernagore, and arrested in Calcutta some time ago, commenced in the French Supreme Court on Thursday last, and terminated on the afternoon of the following day, when the Judge Imperial, in concurrence with the jury, pronounced the sentence of death on the prisoner. After passing the sentence his lordship informed the prisoner and his counsel that it was optional with them to appeal to a higher tribunal at Pondicherry against the decision of that Court, and that such an appeal should be made within three days. There being no direct evidence against the servant of the prisoner, who was supposed to be an accomplice, he was acquitted and released."

FIREARMS FOR THE CHINESE.—The 22nd Regiment Punjab N.I., under the command of Major Stafford, commenced its move from the Presidency on December 21st for Cawnpore. The regiment has come unarmed from China, the muskets of the men having all been made over at Shanghai to the Chinese native army, under the command of Colonel Burgerine, the successor of the late Colonel or General Ward, and, like him, an American, although with a foreign name. The 22nd P.N.I. will be re-armed on its arrival at Cawnpore; but we should not be surprised to hear that, after their long foreign service, the regiment had been ordered to continue its march to the Punjab, where the men, to whom extensive furlough are to be granted, will be near their homes, and in their native climate. In connection with the further supply of British firearms to the Chinese here noticed, added to those previously sent from the Arsenal of Fort William, we may mention that all has not gone smoothly as regards the appointment of British officers to Colonel Burgerine's force, and it has been found necessary by the military authorities and the officers commanding at Shanghai to refer the matter in dispute to the Horse Guards at home. It appears that the officer commanding at Shanghai, Brigadier Staveley, was willing to appoint, and actually did appoint, a number of British officers to do duty with the Chinese force; but Colonel Burgerine's intention, when receiving those officers, was very different from that of Brigadier Staveley in placing their services at his disposal. The former wanted the British officers as drill sergeants, to teach and discipline his men, but not to command them and lead them into action; but neither would Brigadier Staveley sanction, nor was it the wish of the officers to accept any such arrangement, by which the latter would certainly have lost caste. It strikes us very forcibly that the most politic thing that could have been done on the death of Colonel Ward would have been to have appointed a British officer as his successor, and sent Colonel Burgerine to join General McClellan on the Potomac, where affairs are being transacted in which he is much more concerned than in those of the Chinese Government or people. The Chinese contingent is, we know from the best authority, very well and punctually paid by the Pekin Government; and would, if well officered, soon be a thoroughly useful and efficient force; and our relations with the Chinese Government render it highly desirable that it should, with as little delay as possible, be brought totally under British discipline and command.

NAGODE, Dec. 12.—The Lord Bishop of Calcutta was here last Sunday, and preached both morning and evening; he also confirmed several of the residents, and started on Monday night for Jubbulpore. I believe it is uncertain about the Commander-in-Chief paying a flying visit to this deplorable-looking station, with only one decent-looking house in it. Captain Osborne and the rest of the European officers, I hear, are to leave Rewah on the 17th of this month. His Highness the Maharajah does not reside at his capital, preferring a fortified place about fifteen miles from it, named Govindghur. It is currently reported that he is possessed of treasure in this fort to a fabulous amount, and the most amusing part of it is, that he is under the delusion that the place is impregnable; but, alas! for the Rajah or his successors, should they ever try their strength with a British force, there being a hill from which it could be shelled in half an hour.

THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF'S MOVEMENTS.—We see by the Oudh Gazette that the Commander-in-Chief's camp was expected at Jhansie on the 11th inst. From Jhansie his Excellency, accompanied by his personal staff, would make a tour of the military stations in Central India; the camp meanwhile was to have moved to Cawnpore, where it is expected about the 20th inst. It is not known for certain whether Sir Hugh Rose will visit Lucknow, but it is highly probable that he may do so about the first week in Jan. During his stay at Morar his Excellency was feted and feasted to repletion. The Maharajah of Gwalior also entertained the chief most cordially at reviews, dinners, boar hunts, elephant fights, and durbars. At dinner, Scindia seems to have put aside prejudices and sat on the chief's right. It seems from the time Sir Hugh Rose left Simla his progress has been nothing but a series of ovations, which certainly does not look much like unpopularity.

JHANSI, Dec. 12.—His Excellency Sir Hugh Rose arrived yesterday morning, attended by a brilliant staff. At half-past four o'clock in the afternoon he held a levée, which was well attended. At five o'clock he inspected the 34th Native Infantry, had every officer out, and was much pleased with the marching, &c., of the regiment. The commanding officer was desired to intimate this to the men. His Excellency had out the artillery this morning, and probably the cavalry or H.M.'s 80th will be inspected this afternoon. The Commander-in-Chief seems in excellent health, and is as active as any young man on horseback. H.M.'s 80th gave a dinner to the Commander-in-Chief last night. There is to be a dinner in the Chief's camp to-night, and on Saturday another, given by the 16th B.C.—Dec. 14.—His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief inspected H.M.'s 80th yesterday morning. The corps turned out a very strong line. I understand all went off very well. The men have suffered much from Saugor fever, but are improving. In the evening Sir Hugh Rose dined with the officers of the 16th B.C. This morning the Commander-in-chief visited the Jhansi Fort, the place he himself took, and where the rebels met with a tremendous retribution. His Excellency is, indeed, a wonderfully-active man, and I should imagine that it requires a good rider to keep pace with him. His activity was very conspicuous on the evening of the 12th, when he inspected the 16th B.C. He was on a magnificent Arab, and was everywhere, looking sharp after the points. Before a manoeuvre was completed he was sure to appear at the point of formation. The 16th, I hear, were highly complimented for their movements, and certainly the corps is in first-rate order. The horses are not to be surpassed by any native cavalry corps, as far as I can judge. Probably there will be a grand field-day to-morrow, so report says. It must strike everyone who has watched the mode of inspection of Sir H. Rose that the most minute matters meet with his supervision. Not only does he look to the drill, but also to the wants and comforts of the soldiers. I hear that it is probable that his Excellency will leave this on or about the 16th. A battery of horse artillery on the march has arrived this morning, and is halted for inspection. The battery that has just left Jhansi—i. e., Captain Watson's—was inspected on that officer arriving at the Commander-in-chief's camp between Morar and Duteah. We hear that his Excellency was highly pleased with this battery, and complimented the above-mentioned officer. Dinners, levees, &c., are in full play. A private audience for any officers who wish to see the chief will be granted at twelve o'clock to-morrow. As far as I can hear, the Jhansi folks are highly pleased with all that has occurred. You may be quite sure that all the heads of departments know well that Sir H. Rose's inspections are no trifling affairs. He calls out every officer and orders him to do this or that. He appears to favour echelon movements and light infantry, but no one is safe who learns a few manoeuvres only. He may ask anything. Formation of rear guards, I hear, was called for at Morar. Here we have had all the principal sections of the light infantry. Weather now is charming. The head-quarters' hounds went out yesterday, but as there was no scent there was no sport.

CAVALRY CORPS AND NATIVE BANKERS.—We have been favoured with the following communication:—"The Commander-in-Chief is making a thorough examination into the state of Cavalry Corps, in regard to their doings with Native bankers. His Excellency has come to the conclusion that any European officer indebted to the banker of his regiment is unfit to hold his appointment, and he intends calling upon all officers to state the sums they owe, their statements being verified by the banker. Many will have to look out for squalls. It is his Excellency's determination that the commanding officer, and not the banker, shall be commanding officer. Happy are the men who can show a clean sheet."—Mofussilite.

THE NIZAM'S DIAMOND.—About twenty-five years ago a large diamond was found in the Nizam's country under circumstances of rather a curious nature. It was first seen in the hands of a native child, who was playing with it, of course ignorant of its value. On eight annas being offered for what the people considered as a mere stone, their suspicion was excited, which led ultimately to the discovery of the bright stone being a real diamond. This stone was unfortunately broken into two pieces, and the smaller piece, after passing through many hands, was purchased by a native banker for Rs. 70,000. The large piece is in the possession of the Nizam. The size of this stone is 2.48 inches length, 1.35 greatest breadth, and 92 average thickness. Its absolute weight is grains 1,101, and specific gravity 370. This is equal to 277 carats of weight for the rough diamond, and as the rough stones are usually taken to give but one-half of their weight when cut and polished, it would allow 1,380 carats, or a weight between the Pitt (or Regent) diamond (136½ carats) and that of the Grand Duke of Tuscany (139 carats) for it in its present condition. And if we take it that one-eighth of what it would be when polished was taken off, with the splinter sold to the native, we shall then have 155½ carats for the possible weight of it if it had been cut and polished entire, which would then place it as to weight between the Tuscan and the great Russian diamond of 195 carats, which last is well known to be an Indian stone.—Allahabad Gazette.

CINCHONA EXPERIMENT.—The experiment of planting quinine-yielding Cinchonas at Darjeeling is succeeding. The number has increased from 1611 in July to 2286 in October.

JUMMA MUSJID.—The Dehi Journal says the Jumma Musjid of Delhi has been restored for purposes of worship to the Mussulmans. Thus the last of the marks of Government displeasure is removed. The mosque will be kept in repair from the rent paid by squatters, who sell wares on the steps. The mosque is well commanded by the palace and its guns.

COCHIN MISSION.—The Church Missionaries of Peshawar have published a scheme for a mission in Cashmere, to which Sir R. Montgomery and the leading officials have liberally subscribed. The country is very populous. Srinagar, its capital city, is believed to have a population of 200,000 people. Ladak and Iskardo are in the Cashmere territories. Yarkund and other Chinese towns are very closely connected with it. The prospectus is hardly correct in citing the Karens as an instance of the establishment of successful missions in foreign States. Almost all the Christian Karens are our subjects.

SUBSCRIPTIONS BY THE NATIVE CHIEFS OF RAJPOOTANA TO THE LANCASHIRE RELIEF FUND.—We should do injustice to our native feudatories, and should be withholding a powerful stimulant from others who have not yet done their duty, were we not to publish prominently the fact that the chiefs of Rajpootana, through General G. St. P. Lawrence, have subscribed the sum of Rs. 41,499 to the fund for the relief of the distress in the manufacturing districts of England:—

Meywar Rajah and chiefs	Rs. 8,000
Jeypore "	5,000
Marwar "	5,000
Kota "	2,000
Jellawar "	2,000
Ulwar "	15,000
Bhurlpore "	4,000
Sundry collections	3,689

Further subscriptions will raise this amount to the noble sum of half a lakh of rupees. Such an example should stimulate the wealthy trading and banking classes, who possess fortunes far greater than those of Rajpoot chiefs. Nor should General Lawrence's energy be lost on other political agents. Where are the wealthy zemindars of Bengal? One who counts his annual income by lakhs has subscribed just twenty-five rupees!

DOST MAHOMED.—The Delhi Gazette's correspondence last received here states that Dost Mahomed is making preparations for the wintering of his army before Heerat: a clear proof, if the fact be so, that he has no intention of abandoning his designs on the stronghold of his son-in-law, under the influence of Persian intimidation. The same letter likewise confirms the report by stating that the Ameer had made large requisitions on the deputed Government of Affghanistan for munitions of war. We presume that he has more confidence in his own resources than most others feel, and we wish him success, in order to the restoration of quietude in Central Asia; but he is playing a somewhat desperate game, especially when his extreme age, and the chances of his death every day in the natural course of things, are taken into consideration. It is impossible not to admire the indomitable pluck of the old man, resolute and gallant to the last, no matter what the difficulties of his situation may be, even while doubting the prudence of the policy pursued by him, viewed from both political and military points of view.

DELHI FORTIFICATIONS.—The Delhi Gazette states the fortifications of Delhi are to be levelled and the ditch filled up; only the gateways will be left standing. It is long since the Punjab authorities urged this, and we trust that the work of destruction will begin at once. Delhi is still in the North what Hyderabad is in the South of India—a focus of intrigue. We do not want the defences, and it is always possible that they may be again used to our disadvantage. No native troops should be stationed there except for sun duties.

ABOLITION OF TRANSIT DUTIES.—We learn that the Jagheers of Nyagaon and Nyoga, in Bundelcund, have abolished all transit duties within the limits of their respective estates; also that Maha Rajah Holkar and the Rajahs of Dhar and Dewasshyas, have abolished the transit duty on cotton within their respective territories.—Delhi Gazette.

IMPORTS (Calcutta, Dec. 22, 1862).—The market continues quiet, and sales of any moment, excepting for the lighter weights of grey shirtings, which are in limited supply, can only be effected by a concession in price. British Cotton Piece Goods—Grey Shirtings.—Our quotations show an improvement upon those of the mail of the 8th inst.; and prior to the receipt of the telegram dated London, 25th November, even better prices were obtainable; but at present demand is limited, and our quotations barely sustained. White Shirtings in moderate demand, at former prices. Grey Jacquets in good demand; holders very firm. Grey Madapolans more inquired for. Grey Cambrics have advanced 1 to 2 annas. White Twills in better request. Lappets, demand limited. Mull Mulls, in moderate demand. Book Muslins have advanced 1 anna.

EXPORTS (Calcutta, Dec. 22, 1862).—Produce Market.—Since our last report shipments of produce have been on a moderate scale continued. Bull accounts of most articles from the home markets, and the high prices ruling here, on account of general small stocks, prevent shippers from increasing their operations.

MADRAS.

HEALTH OF MADRAS.

We resume our observations on this interesting subject. The health of any city may be said to depend on three causes, viz., seasonal variations, cleanliness, and medical supervision. The first is beyond our control, but the latter two causes leave a wide field open for our attention. In the year under review by Dr. Cornish (1860) no rain fell in Madras up to June, and in the hot months of June, July, and August slight showers intervened with great heat; the purifying sea breeze visited us very irregularly, while the land wind, laden with the unhealthy exhalations of the country over which it had passed, prevailed for a considerable period. The north-east monsoon was also deficient, so that the entire fall of rain for the year 1860 amounted to, we believe, the unprecedentedly small quantity of twenty-four inches—"scarcely one-half of the mean annual quantity registered for the last half-century." The unhappy consequences of these "seasonal peculiarities" was, that the mortality of the year 1860 was far above the usual quantity.

A diagram exhibiting in comparison the mortality of each month of the year, calculated on an average of seven years' observations, shows two well-defined curves. Beginning with the 1st of January, the health of the city shows rapid improvement up to April; there is then a little decline during May (which a wider average may possibly show to be exceptional); the salubrious influences again set in from May to June, in which latter month they reach their maximum force. There occurs from this date a rapid and unbroken decline in the public health up to September, in which month the bills of mortality are the highest of the year. From September the public health again begins to improve, and continues doing so till November—but not nearly to the same extent as in the hot months—when the period of decline again sets in till it returns to the point from which we started in January.

To many who have not given any attention to this subject, it will appear remarkable that the hottest months of the year are by far the healthiest. Calculated on an average of seven years, the mortality curve reaches its greatest depression in April, May, and June. "These, says the report, are the months in which epidemic diseases are reduced to their minima, and in which the propagation of morbid germs giving rise thereto appears to be in a great measure held in abeyance." This comparative healthiness Dr. Cornish seems inclined to account for by supposing the southerly and easterly breezes prevailing in these months to be rich in ozone, and he expresses a regret, in which we fully concur, that "observations are not carried on at the Madras Observatory and immediately on the sea coast, as to the amount of ozone in the prevailing winds." A comparison between the Linear Mortuary Tables of Bombay and Madras bears out this opinion, and seems to show "how little temperature per se influences death-rates, and that the more persistently a town or locality is exposed to a direct sea breeze in any portion of the year, the greater the immunity from cholera."

In the months of July, August, and September, the combined heat and moisture tends, by hastening the process of decomposition in all substances, to develop morbid germs. The tendency of substances to rapid decay at this period of the year is manifested in various well-known instances. "Fish caught in the afternoon are stale in the evening—meat bought in the bazaar in the morning becomes tainted, if allowed to remain uncooked to the hour of dinner—fresh water, if left to stand a few hours in a clean jug, becomes stinking—while myriads of representatives of the insect world are called into existence, and enjoy their brief hold of life, during the period of rapid change and tendency to decay." The strain on the vital forces of man is, for the same reason, no doubt, aggravated at this period; it is not accordingly a matter of wonder, that intestinal complaints should multiply, when the power of resisting them is lessened, and the chance of taking partly decomposed food into the system, is so greatly increased. During this season, all sorts of food should be constantly subjected to rigid examination.

One fact is remarkable in the sanitary history of the year 1860. During the dry months of January, February, March, April, and May, when the effluvia from the drains, &c., was most offensive and a matter of frequent comment in the columns of the local press, the town was singularly free from cholera. It is evident that there existed during this period some counteracting salubrious influences in the atmosphere which prevented the breaking out of the disease; and apparently when the sanitary counteractive ceased the disease first inclined to become epidemic in Choolay, a very dirty locality in the sixth police division of the town. While the epidemic lasted the Mahomedans and the East Indians were considerably the greatest sufferers.

Dr. Cornish combats the idea that cholera is a contagious disease, and contracted by personal intercourse. This is a point on which it is most desirable that the best information should be disseminated, as misapprehension concerning it naturally leads "to neglect of the sick and a dread of encountering the invasion of the malady." The most eminent authorities agree that the peculiar poison which causes the disease is, for the most part, thrown off from the body by vomiting and purging. These discharges, accordingly, it is most important to dispose of in a manner to render them harmless for the future. "In practice it is found that, if they are received into vessels containing fresh burnt lime or dry powdered charcoal, simple substances within the reach of all, and the whole at once buried underground," the object is obtained equally as if more expensive disinfectants, such as chloride of lime, &c., were used. When those are not at hand, we may be allowed to suggest a substance still more available. Freshly dug-up earth is a powerful disinfectant. Bad smells are simply an intimation from that careful dame, Mother Nature, to bury the substance producing them out of sight in the earth.

Though the greater part of Dr. Cornish's report is taken up with observations on cholera, a violent outbreak of which was the leading sanitary feature of the year 1860, there are still several interesting and important facts with reference to other diseases, a widely-spread knowledge of which may lead to their satisfactory elucidation. Small-pox, for instance, attains its maximum height in the month of March with singular regularity, and it has been sought to connect this curious phenomenon with magnetical disturbance, consequent on solar influence peculiar to this period of the year. Diseases of the organs of circulation appear to have been very fatal to Europeans, and Dr. Cornish takes occasion to warn his countrymen against the evil results of immoderate indulgence in athletic sports, the proper use of which tends to preserve a healthy condition of body and mind, but their abuse to produce "aneurism of the great vessels;" and this is probably one cause, amongst others, why the proportion of deaths in Europeans exceed that of other classes whose habits are less active. The causes which subject Europeans so frequently to disease of the liver are apparently still to a great extent a mystery, "and the subject requires more careful investigation than has yet been given to it." It appears that the age at which native women begin to bear children "has been a subject of much popular misrepresentation." If the registry of deaths in child-birth is in any degree to be depended upon, the cases of precocious maternity must be very rare, for there is not a single casualty occurring to a female in child-birth at an age below fifteen years."

"But, notwithstanding these early marriages, child-bearing is more frequent between the ages of twenty-five and thirty-five, tending to show that the reproductive powers are regulated by a physiological law applicable to the whole human race, viz., that these powers are most complete at the period when the vitality and physical strength are most perfect, and that the influences of climate in producing early maturity, or of early marriages on the fertility of a race, are much less important than have been commonly supposed."

The proportion of women who die in child-birth in Madras is nearly five times that which obtains in London. Three hundred and fifty are the annual deaths from this cause, and we may safely say that two-thirds of these are occasioned by "the ignorant and barbarous treatment which the uneducated midwives subject the poor creatures to." Of leprosy seventy-five males and thirty females died. This is about the usual proportion, and "there seems to be no satisfactory explanation why this disease should be more than twice as fatal to males as to females? A curious fact is also brought to light with reference to the proportion of the two sexes born into the world in this country. In England this proportion is 105 boys to 100 girls. Judging by the statistics of the Madras Lying in Hospital the proportion in India is upwards of double this, being 113 males to 100 females, on an average of two and a half years. No mother requires to be told that boys are much more difficult to rear than girls. The fair sex, indeed, have the advantage of us as to their chances of life both in childhood and old age. It is easy to explain why men should die earlier after they have obtained maturity, but not so easy to discover a cause for the greater mortality of infant male over infant female children. The fact, however, is well established, that more male than female children are born into the world, and the relative ages of the parents is supposed to have some influence in producing this result, a supposition which the facts brought to light by this report would seem to corroborate. Fifty-two persons met their death by accidental drowning in tanks, wells, and the sea, in 1860; there were four fatal cases of snake-bite, and one from the "bite of a rat." A child died from the sting of a scorpion, and there were sixteen cases of suicide, fifteen of which were by drowning and one by hanging. We fear that open wells offer great temptations to this crime, while people are under the influence of angry or revengeful feelings. We must now conclude our rather lengthy observations on this interesting report. The only fault which we have to find with it is that it comes to our hands nearly two years after the time to which it refers.—Athenæum, Dec. 18.

THE TREVELYAN MEETING.

Proposed Programme of Proceedings for the Public Meeting convened by the Sheriff, in the People's Park at Madras, at a quarter to five, P.M., on Monday, December 22, 1862:—

The Sheriff will open the meeting in the usual manner. JOHN VANS AGNEW, Esq., in the chair. Resolved—I. That this meeting recognizes in the fact of Sir Charles Edward Trevelyan's appointment to the Financial Membership of the Supreme Council a ground of public satisfaction and confidence.

II. That it is the opinion of this meeting that the best welcome that can be offered Sir Charles Trevelyan on his return to India is an address, and that the following address be adopted:—

"TO THE HON. SIR CHARLES EDWARD TREVELYAN, K.C.B.

"Sir,—It is peculiarly appropriate that we, the inhabitants of Madras, should be the first to welcome you on your return to India, as we were, on a previous occasion, the first to deplore the circumstances that led to your removal from among us.

"It is not necessary to remind you of the anticipations we then indulged in as to the brilliant future still in store for you, and we have learned with unfeigned satisfaction that our estimate of your administrative powers has been so emphatically endorsed by the Home Government, as is evidenced by your present high appointment.

"We have every confidence that, as the Financial Minister of British India, you will amply confirm our oft-repeated expression of opinion regarding your 'abilities, attainments, and peculiar experience,' by demonstrating your special fitness for the post to which you have been called. We cannot forget your memorable words that a 'reduction of expenditure is the primary mode of making good a deficiency;' and as an opportunity is now afforded of putting into practice this sound, economical maxim, we hope there will be no necessity for the continuance of taxes burdensome to a large portion of the community and little remunerative to the State.

"We regard your appointment as confirming the new financial policy of India, and we feel confident that you will permit nothing to interfere with the carrying out of such reforms as may be essential to the well-being of that vast population whose destinies will be so largely affected by your financial measures. We would also express our hope that during your administration no unwise economy will be sanctioned in the Departments of Public Works and Education, the importance of both of which to the prosperity of India and its inhabitants cannot be over-estimated.

"Knowing as we do your sentiments on the subject, we refrain from pressing upon you the necessity which exists for increased liberality being shown in the civil administration of the country, especially with reference to those who occupy the lower but still important and responsible appointments. The same remark applies to the Volunteer movement throughout British India.

"Besides joining in the general expectations of the benefits the whole of British India will derive from your financial administration, we feel great satisfaction in the conviction that the interests of our Presidency will receive the careful attention and support of one who has studied them on the spot, and made himself thoroughly acquainted with our special wants.

"Your visits to the various parts of our Presidency, by which you acquired an intimate knowledge of the capabilities for improvement which it offers, and the generous encouragement you invariably afforded to every attempt to develop its resources, have not been effaced from our memories, and we entertain the sanguine hope that in your new sphere you will avail yourself of every opportunity which may present itself for promoting the interests of this vast Presidency.

"In conclusion, we hail your return to India as a happy augury of the policy to be pursued by the Supreme Government, and with one consent heartily bid you welcome to the scene of your former labours. Devoted, as you are, to the zealous performance of every duty, we see the best guarantee of a future no less useful, though more famous. And we humbly trust that the Great Disposer of events will long spare your valuable life, and make it largely contribute to the social and moral advancement of Her Majesty's Indian subjects."

III. That the following gentlemen be appointed to present Sir Charles Trevelyan with the Address, and to communicate with him at Galle:—John Vans Agnew, Esq., the Hon. T. Sydney Smyth, the Hon. V. Sadagopah Charloo, the Hon. W. R. Arbuthnot, the Ven. Archdeacon T. Dealtry, Eyre B. Powell, Esq., Prince Humayoon Jah, Hyder Jung Bahadoor, Hafiz Soodrool Iskan Khan Bahadoor, Runganadum Shastri, Esq., P. Sommoosondrum Chetty, Esq., T. G. Clarke, Esq., R. Kennedy, Esq., W. H. Crake, Esq., and all the Members of the Chambers of Commerce; J. G. Coleman, Esq., and the Members of the Trade Association; and the Representatives of the Press.

IV. That the thanks of the inhabitants of Madras are due to Sir Charles Trevelyan for the kind solicitude evinced by him for the welfare of the people of this city, in originating the People's Park and various other local improvements calculated to promote the health, enjoyment, and comfort of all classes.

V. That the thanks of the meeting be given to the committee of the People's Park for the promptitude with which they granted the use of the park for this occasion, and to the other gentlemen who have made the arrangements for the convenience of the public.

VI. That the thanks of the meeting be given to the chairman for presiding on this happy occasion.

N.B.—There will be chairs and ices for the ladies, and the fireworks will commence as soon as it is dark, and last for one hour.

MAILS VIA BEYPORE TO MADRAS.—It is with extreme satisfaction that we learn that a question to which much attention has been lately directed by the local press is about to receive a practical solution. Since the railway has been open to Beypore, we, as well as our friends of Calcutta, have ardently desired to see the Mails carried by that route. A beginning is now about to be made. The Calcutta Steam Navigation Company, with the enterprise that characterises that body, are now prepared to run the next Bombay Mail on from Bombay to Beypore, immediately on the arrival of the P. and O. inward steamer at the former port; and, with the view of practically ascertaining what time can be saved by carrying the mails by this route, the Madras Government will run a special train from Beypore to Madras with the mails. This will be good news to all who have groaned under the slow and uncertain delivery of the mails via Bombay at this Presidency. If the experiment is as successful as we have every expectation of its being, it may lead to Beypore becoming, as it ought to be, and no doubt ultimately will be, the port of disembarkation for all the mails from Europe to this country. We wait with much interest the result of the experiment.—Athenæum.

BANGALORE.—Six Companies of the Fusiliers are to leave for Cannanore. They march to Tripattor, thence by rail to Beypoor, where steamers will be in waiting to convey them to their destination. The other companies will follow as soon as relieved by a portion of H.M.'s 66th.—Bangalore Herald.

MADRAS TIME FOR ALL INDIA.—The Calcutta Gazette notifies that all its announcements will refer to the Madras time for the future. The reason of this is to be found in the curious fact that, save in Travancore, there are only two observatories in India—at Madras and Simla. Madras time is reduced to Calcutta time by subtracting thirty-three minutes.

THE RAJAH OF TRAVANCORE has lately returned to his own dominions, after having made a short visit to this Presidency, in return for that which H.E. Sir William Denison recently paid to him when on the western coast. His Highness was received here with all the honours which Government could pay to his high rank and higher character, and our public cordially seconded the authorities by offering their tokens of respect to one of the most enlightened and deserving native princes who now occupy Indian thrones. It has been suggested that his Highness should be asked to take a seat in our Legislative Council, but it is thought, we understand, that his sovereign position, and consequent inability to fulfil the duties of a legislator by residing at Madras when the Council sits, would render the offering of a seat to him but an empty honour, apart from other objections. It is generally hoped, however, that his brother, the First Prince of Travancore, who would adorn the post, and who well deserves the compliment of a proffer of it to him, will be invited to form one of the local Legislature.—Athenaeum.

MYSORE.—According to the information of the Times of India, the Commissioner of Mysore, Mr. Bowring, proposes to effect a complete re-organization of the whole Commission. The arrangements now made contemplate the re-division of that province into more handy and compact portions, each administered by a larger number of effective European revenue and judicial officers. Hitherto each superintendent in Mysore has had a larger division than it was possible for any one man properly to supervise, and, albeit they were, some of them, good men and true, no one will deny that the districts were far too large. These flourishing territories, including that of Coorg, are henceforward to have an administration composed of one commissioner, one judicial commissioner, three superintendents of division, nine deputy superintendents or district officers, twelve European assistants, and sixteen native assistants. Each superintendent will have three deputies and three districts under him, each with a staff of assistants. The commissioner will have a secretary and a military assistant at head-quarters. Bangalore is to have a Small Cause Court and two judges, as well as a superintendent of police for the cantonment alone. It is to be presumed that the new organization can hardly be effected without some additional cost; but where the weakness in executive officers was so great, and the revenue so ample, there is reason to believe that the extra expense will be more than compensated by the additional vigour and energy infused into the administration.

REVENUE OF MYSORE.—The revenue of Mysore at the present day represents an annual income of a million of money. More than this amount was actually collected in the past year, and the net increase on the previous year was upwards of five lacs of rupees. This crore and one lac of rupees embraces comprehensively fourteen heads or sources of revenue, which we will endeavour to condense still more, and divide in round numbers into four items. The first great item is, of course, Land Revenue 65½ lacs.
2. Excise and Customs 12½ "
3. Abkarry 10½ "
4. Moturpha, sandalwood, fruit groves, timber, and miscellaneous 12½ "

MAJOR CURTIS'S AFTER DINNER ORATIONS.—It is extraordinary how everything in the shape of volunteer corps and rifle associations meets with inevitable failure in this country. It seems they have a "Rifle Association of Western India" at Bombay, and on Wednesday, the 3rd, the inaugural dinner was held in the tents on the Esplanade, which, according to the Times of India of the 5th —"Seems to have afforded Major Curtis a new opportunity of showing how disagreeable it is possible for him to make himself to gentlemen who are unfortunate enough to be associated with him. In the course of an after-dinner speech of not more than a few minutes' duration, he seems to have contrived to insult almost everybody at the table, not even excepting the few foreign gentlemen present as guests on the occasion. The gallant major first fell foul of the whole English community of the island, whom he charged with poltroonery of the lowest order during the months of 1857, when the mutiny was at its height, and Bombay at the mercy of the native troops in garrison. To have heard Major Curtis speak, one would suppose that European gentlemen of the island might have been seen climbing up the sides of the ships in harbour in the monsoon of that year, leaving English women and children to the mercies of the native soldiery or the budmashes of the town. We believe it is the fact that some half-dozen English families did take refuge on board ship during the Buckreef of 1857, to relieve the intense alarm of the ladies of those families, an alarm by no means groundless, be it remembered. The reflections of Major Curtis upon the incident, however, were most uncalled for and offensive. Had every English family in the island gone on board ship in July, 1857, the measure would have been one simply of wise precaution in circumstances of much danger." After this, the Major proceeded to abuse the volunteers, and then went on to the "foreign" guests. What does that word "foreign" mean? "To let none of the gentlemen present escape, the Major proceeded to remark upon the 'foreign guests' of the evening, politely hinting that some of them came from countries so obscure, that he should despair, with his limited knowledge of geography, of finding them upon the map. These extraordinary and mal-a-droit speeches called up, as might have been expected, speaker after speaker in indignant remonstrance; and Messrs. Crawford, Gompertz, Dr. Millar, and others, we believe, replied somewhat warmly and effectively to the Major's aspersions. The discussion became so hot, and Major Curtis so unruly, that Commodore Frushard left the chair, and broke up the dinner party. The guests were persuaded to return, we believe, for a few minutes, when Major Curtis made as full an apology as he could, by eating all the disagreeable things he had said, with an amount of good temper almost as characteristic of the man as his unfortunate habit of saying rude and disagreeable things without intending them."

ARCHBISHOP AND PRIMATE OF THE EAST.—The first reception of the newly-arrived Archbishop of Goa was to take place at the cathedral of M. S. de Gloria, Mazagon. Grand preparations are being made for his reception, arches are being erected, and the church richly decorated. The orchestra will be composed of an excellent band, and an appropriate Te Deum has been selected for the occasion. The Catholics of Bombay are requested to attend, as his Grace, who was invited by his Holiness the Pope at Rome, has brought with him peace and harmony to the whole Roman Catholic community in India. When he set his foot on shore the assemblage of the faithful was immense. The Union band accompanied his Grace to the chapel at Colaba.

EARTHQUAKE AT MUNDLASAIR.—A correspondent at Mundlasair has furnished us with the following, dated the 28th ultimo:—"We have had in Mundlasair and the villages adjacent a very strong earthquake, which lasted about fifteen seconds, on the evening of the 18th November. The sound was like the rumbling of many carriages, and the sensation produced so great that the glasses on the table at which we sat jingled loudly. The earthquake was felt about seven o'clock p. m., and it has been followed by very unusually close, sultry weather, accompanied by the fall of about a quarter of an inch of rain on the 25th."—Times of India.

TUNNEL UNDER THE INDUS.—A correspondent of the Hills states that Major Robertson, the original projector, and Colonel Taylor, C.B., are about to report on the tunnel under the Indus; on their verdict will depend the completion of the work. Nothing is more lamentable, in the Public Works Department, than the facility with which works, on which large sums have been spent, are abandoned or suspended. Some £8,000 have been spent on this tunnel, two-thirds of it are finished, and yet there must be another report. Meanwhile we may ask, when will the Lahore and Peshawur road be completed, and how much more than a million sterling is it to cost?

THE PLAGUE OF LOCUSTS.—"The locusts, we regret to say, have again visited Kurrachee. They seem determined to leave nothing standing in the shape of verdure. The grass, which promised to be plentiful this year, has been all but destroyed, and what can be procured must fall little short of grain in value to those who have horses to keep."

THE TRUE LIGHT OF THE GOSPEL is beginning again to shine in Abyssinia. The missionary Flad reports that the word of the cross has taken root in some souls. He specially names two pious men, Debetra Saneb, the royal Chancellor, and his brother, who hold two weekly prayer meetings, numerously attended by the soldiers of the castle. The Falashas, or Abyssinian Jews, also show a great desire to know the gospel. Thirty of them have been receiving instruction from Mr. Flad, with a view to baptism. There is, however, much opposition.—Bombay Guardian.

CHINA.

HONG KONG, Dec. 15.—No political incidents of importance have occurred during the past fortnight. The state of the Imperial cause in China appears, however, to be improving. The rebels have not been seen in the neighbourhood of Shanghai. The city of Shang-yu, in the Ningpo district, has been taken from the rebels by an Imperial force. Troops are being concentrated in the vicinity of Nanking, in order to besiege that city, and additional forces are being collected for its defence.

From Pekin we learn that the remains of the late Emperor have been conveyed to their last resting-place, about eighty miles distant from the capital. An attempt was made to have as great a display as possible on the occasion. The procession was about a mile in length, but it is described as having had a decidedly "rag fair" appearance, the general paraphernalia being much inferior in style to what has been known in the case of high Mandarins. The young Emperor accompanied the remains of his late father for a short distance beyond the city, when he knelt down and bade them adieu.—Overland China Mail.

PUBLIC WORKS ESTABLISHMENT.

Public Works Dept., Dec. 10.—No. 207.—With reference to notification No. 18 of 1860, reorganising the executive branches of the public works establishment in Bengal, the following modification in the scale of establishment therein laid down is notified for general information:—

The establishment of two superintending engineers of the 3rd class is prospectively abolished, and that of superintending engineer, 2nd class, is increased from two to three, making six superintending engineers in all. The Assam circle will for the present continue under charge of a superintendent of works on the pay of a 1st class executive engineer.

The superintending engineer, 3rd class, now in charge of the Cuttack circle, will continue to be retained as a supernu. superintending engineer, on his existing salary, until absorbed.

The special appointment of civil architect is also abolished, and the division will be held on the same general terms as all other executive divisions.

In place of the two appointments thus abolished (one superintending engineer, 3rd class, and the civil architect) two more executive engineers of the 1st class will be added to the strength of the department in Bengal, which will then consist of—

- 1 chief engineer;
- 8 superintending engineers, 1st class;
- 8 superintending engineers, 2nd class;
- 40 executive engineers.

Travelling Allowance, C.S.

No. 39g.—H.E. the Gov. gen. in Council is pleased to direct the publication of the following Resolutions, with the remark that they are generally applicable to all officers, covenanted and uncovenanted, who are entitled to travelling allowance at Rs. 5 per diem when travelling in their districts on duty:—

Financial Dept., Fort William, Aug. 14, 1855.—No. 3,228.—Read an endorsement from the Home Dept., No. 916, dated 28th ult., forwarding, for consideration and orders, a letter from the Govt. of Bengal, No. 1,392, dated 23rd idem, with an inclosure, regarding the allowance to officers of the actual travelling charge incurred by them.

Resolution.—With a view to afford every facility and encouragement to a district officer to present himself at once upon the spot where the public interests may require his presence, the Hon. the President in Council is pleased to resolve, as a general rule, that any covenanted officer entitled under the existing rules to travelling allowance when absent from his station on duty in the interior of his district, may draw travelling allowances at his option, either by the distance travelled, at the rate of 8 annas a mile, or by the number of days he is absent from the sudder station, at the rate of 5 rupees a-day, the bill for the charge so incurred being countersigned by the commissioner of the division.

From the Civil Auditor to the Secretary to the Govt. of India.

No. 3,571.—Financial Dept., dated Fort William, Dec. 13, 1858.

Sir,—I have the honour to submit, for the consideration of the Hon. the President of India in Council, a letter, in original, from Mr. H., the officiating magistrate of Moorshedabad, in which that officer raises a question as to the correct rendering of the Financial Resolution, No. 3,228, dated Aug. 14, 1855, regulating the travelling allowance which officers, when on duty in the interior of their districts, are entitled to draw.

2. The above resolution allows an officer an option of either drawing a mileage of 8 annas or an allowance of Rs. 5 a-day when absent from the sudder station on duty; but it does not, it is submitted, allow an officer the option of charging both methods of calculation in the same bill. This principle of election has been hitherto observed by me in the adjustment of travelling allowance authorised under the resolution. Mr. H., however, is of opinion that, when an officer on circuit is suddenly summoned from his camp to hold an inquiry, he should have the option, just as he would have if at the sudder station, of surrendering his daily allowance during such absence for the more lucrative one of a mileage allowance. If it be ruled otherwise, Mr. H. contends that the object of the resolution would be defeated, and all incentive to celerity of movement removed.

3. I am able to concur with Mr. H. in the conclusion he draws, inasmuch as no comparison can be instituted between an officer suddenly summoned from the sudder station to hold an inquiry, and one summoned, on a like errand, from an encampment in the Mofussil. In the former case the magistrate so summoned was drawing the bare salary of his office, and was not equipped in a way to ensure celerity of movement; and not only so, but his election, under the circumstances, would be naturally a mileage allowance. In the latter case a magistrate was equipped, and having made his election, if summoned, as Mr. H. was, to a distance from his camp, cannot, it is submitted, be allowed for this particular journey to forego his first election, merely because the mileage allowance would be more advantageous. Moreover, he had the benefit of five rupees a-day when encamped, it may be for days, and must be content to share the advantages and disadvantages arising from his original selection.

4. The return of the original enclosure is requested with your reply.

No. 7,970.—Financial Dept., Fort William, Dec. 31, 1858.—The Hon. the President in Council agrees with the civil auditor in the view taken by him in respect to the ruling contained in the Financial Resolution of Aug. 14, 1855, regulating the travelling allowance which officers, when on duty in the interior of their districts, are entitled to draw.

Copy forwarded to the civil auditor in reply to the above letter, and the original paper received therewith returned.

H.E. in Council is pleased also to rule, that on the conditions laid down in the foregoing orders, unconvicted officers who are now entitled to Rs. 3 per diem when travelling in their districts on duty may have a similar option of drawing travelling allowance either at that rate or at the rate of four annas a-mile.

E. DRUMMOND,
Sec. to the Govt. of India.

BY THE GOVERNOR IN COUNCIL.

MAILS TO INDIA.

Mails to India and China, via Marseilles, are despatched from London as follows, viz.:—Those for Bombay packets, on the evening of the 3rd and 18th of each month; and those for Calcutta packets (including mails for Ceylon, Madras, and China), on the evenings of the 10th and 26th of each month. When any of these dates falls on a Sunday, the mails are made up on the following evening.

Letters and Newspapers can be forwarded to any part of India, via Bombay and Marseilles, and in most cases will reach their destination some days sooner than if despatched by the following Calcutta mail. The Bombay mails via Southampton, however, are no longer available for the transmission of Letters or Newspapers to the Madras Presidency.

Mails for the Mediterranean and all parts of India and China, except the Bombay Presidency, are despatched via Southampton on the mornings of the 4th and 20th, or, when either of these dates falls on Sunday, upon the previous evening.

Mails for the Mediterranean, the Presidency of Bombay, and Upper and North-West Provinces of Bengal and China, are despatched via Southampton on the 12th and 27th of the month, except when these dates fall on Sunday, in which case they are forwarded on the previous evening.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MR. THACKERAY.

SOME one has been writing an attack upon William Makepeace Thackeray in the Delhi Gazette, accusing him of sneering at, or speaking or writing cynically and insultingly of the fair sex generally. Some one who calls himself a personal friend of our popular English novelist defends him in the same paper, and states that he has known him long and yet never heard him utter a sneer at womankind. It is now very generally known that though Mr. Thackeray has been considered a cynical writer he is anything but a cynical man; in fact, he is "the best-natured man with the worst-natured muse."

A NEW BOMBAY SANATORIUM.

IT is a fortunate thing indeed for the European soldiers, and other foreign residents in India, that the country is not altogether a low and level land—as flat as a table. There is, in fact, great varieties of surface, and almost every variety of climate in the East, and a man there may often find a locality in which he may change his atmosphere in a few days, or even in a few hours. We have reason to rejoice that our British troops there, who are so precious and so expensive to the State, are seldom located very far from wholesome positions, to which they may be transferred occasionally in a comparatively short time. We are glad to learn that a new sanatorium has been lately discovered for the use of European troops in the Bombay Presidency. This has attracted the earnest attention of the active, zealous, and intelligent Quartermaster-general of the Bombay army, Colonel Phayre. It is the plateau of Nurdur Deo, one of the Eastern spurs of the Ghat range of mountains, situate in Wai district of the Sattara Collectorate, and distant from the sea as the crow flies not more than thirty miles. It is 4,000 feet above the level of the sea. On the summit there are four or five miles, either way, of flat arable land, the soil consisting of gravel and a brownish mould. Colonel Phayre was there in the month of April and May, during which he never felt a hot wind. The climate is peculiarly agreeable and wholesome, and the scenery very beautiful. All that is required to make the most of these advantages is the construction of good roads for both travel and traffic, and this want will, no doubt, be very speedily supplied.

THE "CORNHILL MAGAZINE" AND THE "TIMES OF INDIA."

THE Editor of the Times of India, whose forte is figures—who beats Bishop Colenso in the logic of numbers—has put forth all his strength in an assault upon the writer of an article in the Cornhill Magazine on the subject of Indian Cotton. The Cornhill writer has endeavoured to show how well India is capable of filling up the hiatus caused by the cessation of the supply of cotton from America. He observes, that sceptics on this point may be answered by a reference to the customs returns of India of many years ago, ere land transit duties were abolished. If this be done, he says, it will be ascertained that the revenue derived from cotton which passed the frontier into Lower Bengal from the Upper Provinces of India, including that which found its way from Nagpore, via Jubbulpore, to Mirzapore and the Doab, was no less than £500,000 annually, realised by a duty of one shilling (eight annas, we suppose, he means) upon every maund of eighty pounds, which shows an annual export from those provinces of 800,000,000 lbs. of cotton, which, taking the bale at 300 lbs., gives 2,686,000 bales. If this was the annual export of cotton from one province and a portion of another, says the writer, it will not be too much to estimate the culture of other districts at double that amount. Hereupon the Times of India waxeth indignant and satirical, not only with the unfortunate contributor to the Cornhill Magazine, but with "those inveterate blunderers, the local Saturday Review and the Friend of India," who, it seems, have endorsed the statement of the home writer; and the latter paper even adds that the India-house would readily furnish similar returns for Madras and Bombay, so that the total would give the minimum of the Indian production, when the transit duties prevailed, at about 11,000,000 bales, of 300 lbs. each. If these writers, says the Times of India, were school-boys, they would deserve to be flogged for the perpetration of such blunders. Two-thirds of the soil of India, he says, or 200,000,000 acres, must be put under cultivation to produce such a supply. The Times of India calculates that if these writers are correct in their estimates the total produce of the soil must have been worth a thousand millions sterling per annum! With reference to the Cornhill Magazine writer in particular, the Times of India says it will surprise no one to learn that he has actually in his calculation mistaken rupees for pounds! We are ourselves of opinion that almost any amount of really good cotton may be grown in India under favourable circumstances, and are vexed that those who are endeavouring to encourage our hopes of relief from the East in the great cotton dearth at home, should gratify the croakers, and expose themselves to contradictions and ridicule by careless over-statements and inaccurate arithmetic. Our distant contemporary, who adopts so pretentious a name—who is the leading journal, or Thunderer of the East—does not want ability, but in this instance, at least, he is battling on the wrong side.

THE "TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE" AND THE INDIAN PRESS.

The Hurkaru in its "Gossip from Home," in a letter dated London, 3rd of November, has given a very angry account of an article in the Temple Bar Magazine, in which the writer alludes with unmitigated contempt to the press of India, which, by the way, the late Lord Macaulay thought about equal to the provincial press of England, though at the time of giving expression to that opinion he was the best abused man in all India, almost every paper in the country commenting with extraordinary indignation and asperity upon what was called his Black Act. The contributor to Temple Bar, if we are to believe a writer in the Delhi Gazette, says, for we have not the magazine before us, that if any one wants to have "an insight into Anglo-Indian society in the gorgeous East" he should obtain a few copies of the Hurkaru, the Englishman, the Mofussilite, or the Delhi Gazette. He praises the Delhi Gazette for "its management," which he says is so good that "it counterbalances the editorial incapacity so deplorably apparent in every line of original matter." After making several extracts from the Indian papers, he exclaims, "Enough and to spare of this trifling and balderdash." Though he condemns the editorial department of the Delhi Gazette, he decides that "it is by far the best conducted and most respectable paper published out of Calcutta or Bombay, and quite equal to any produced in those Presidency towns. He then makes the sweeping remark that Indian journalism "is a disgrace to the age and to the country whence it sprung." Which country is that? He adds that "it is an anachronism and blot upon English civilisation." He attributes the worthlessness of the press of India to the fact that Anglo-Indian society is so "ill-educated and rotten,"—though a better-educated community, upon the whole, than the British in India is nowhere to be met with. It is almost exclusively a community of gentlemen. We are compelled to admit that there is a great deal too much petty scandal and frivolous gossip and personal disputation in the press of India. The greater portion of the contents of Indian newspapers must be dull indeed to home readers unconnected in any way with India, and who know little about the local politics and care less; but no one can fairly attribute generally to Anglo-Indian editors a deficiency of talent and intelligence. The editor of the Delhi Gazette refers to the matter very good-humouredly, and inquires whether any charitable friend will lend him a copy of the Temple Bar containing the attack upon him, "distinctly declining," however, to spend more than the legal anna postage for the pleasure of a perusal of the abuse heaped upon him.

THE LATE LORD DALHOUSIE'S ADMINISTRATION.

THE recently-published number of the Edinburgh Review contains a long and elaborate article on the eight years' administration of the late Marquis of Dalhousie, and the writer proposes to follow it up with a review of the administration of the late Lord Canning, as the death of the last Governor-General and the first Viceroy of India closes, he says, with sad completeness the series of great events and great changes which must always be connected with their names.

The reviewer is an enthusiastic admirer of Lord Dalhousie as a statesman, and we cannot, perhaps, trust much to his impartiality, but he, at all events, arranges important facts with such ability and cleverness as will help the future historian of India to see his way to a more correct estimate of that nobleman's claims to be regarded as one of he best and most energetic of the representatives of British sovereignty in the East. What has been called Lord Dalhousie's policy of annexation is explained to have been no settled policy or plan at all, but the result of unexpected circumstances wholly beyond his control, and which led to the forced abandonment of his original intentions. The reviewer thinks that he is under no necessity to defend the acquisition of the Punjab. The right, he says, never has admitted, and never could admit of a doubt. This is not true, for it has been, and still is, a vexed question; though it is hardly fair to visit Lord Dalhousie with especial blame for increasing the British Empire in India by what is called annexation, when so many of his most esteemed predecessors have done the same. But, whatever may be the conflict of opinions on the subject of our right to annex the Punjab, there can be but one opinion as to the extraordinary judgment and success displayed in Lord Dalhousie's administration of the Punjab, and the singular felicity of his choice of his agents in that quarter. He made every native State in India respect and fear the British authority; he was not, however, energetic and zealous in questions of war only, but devoted himself with characteristic zeal and energy to the duties of a great government in time of peace. Though the revenues of India were not in the flourishing condition they are now, he spent on public works in one year the sum of two millions and a-half. He might well boast of what he had done in the vast work of the Ganges Canal, five hundred and twenty-five miles in length, and the rapidity with which he spread the wires of the electric telegraph all over India.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

CLAPHAM-COMMON.—To be LET, a very cheerful HOUSE, facing the common, and overlooking an ornamental enclosure in the rear; containing good dining and drawing rooms, five large bed-rooms, and convenient domestic offices. In substantial and ornamental repair. Omnibuses to the City and West-end constantly. Near the railways to the City, Victoria, Brighton, Southampton, &c. The drainage perfect; the supply of water good; and the rent moderate.

Apply to Mr. JAMES STEVENS, Estate Agent, Pavement, Clapham-common, S.

FIRE! THIEVES!! FIRE!!!—C. H. GRIFFITHS having purchased nearly all the best quality of Fire-proof Safes from the International Exhibition of 1862, including those made by Messrs. Perry, Chatwood, Rhodes, and other eminent makers, is enabled to offer them at half the original cost. The patented improvements of the latter maker render it an impossibility for fire to take any effect under any circumstances of time and place. In consequence of the increasing demand for these essential and valuable repositories, which no house of business, or, indeed, private house (where plate, books, and documents are kept) should be without, in these hazardous and dangerous times, C. H. G. has taken additional premises, 3, Pentonville-road, opposite the Angel, Islington, where he also intends to keep a variety of Second-hand Safes by those eminent large makers, Milner, Price, Morlan, &c., at half the price of new. Sketches, with prices, free by post.

Old-change, St. Paul's, London; and opposite the Angel, Islington.

MAPS OF INDIA & CHINA.

MAP of INDIA; showing the British Territories subdivided into Collectorates, and the position and boundary of each Native State; chiefly compiled from Trigonometrical Surveys, executed by order of the Honourable Court of Directors of the East India Company. On six sheets—Size, 5 ft. 6 in. high; 5 ft. 8 in. wide. £8; or, on cloth, in a case, £2. 12s. 6d.; or, with rollers and varnished, £23. 3s.

The object kept in view in compiling this map has been to render it available to the greatest possible extent for popular use. For this purpose the names of all stations, civil and military, are inserted, as well as those of all towns and places of note likely to be looked for. To make clear the subdivisions of the whole of the country, both British and native, the limits of the various districts and collectorates, with their names, are distinctly indicated. The railways and telegraphs are laid down, and the trunk roads conspicuously coloured. The newly-acquired district in Burmah is included. To avoid, however, the confusion consequent upon over-crowding, and make the map clear and easy for reference, the names of many small villages, and places of no present importance, have been omitted, and thus a very wide measure of comprehensiveness has been attained, while needless diffusiveness has been avoided.

A GENERAL MAP of INDIA; compiled chiefly from Surveys executed by order of the Honourable East India Company, with the railways and telegraphs. On six sheets—Size, 5 ft. 3 in. wide; 5 ft. 4 in. high. £8; or, on cloth, in a case, £2. 12s. 6d.; or, with rollers and varnished, £23. 3s.

MAP of the ROUTES in INDIA; with Tables of Distances between the principal Towns and Military Stations. On one sheet—Size 2 ft. 3 in. wide; 2 ft. 9 in. high. 9s.; or, on cloth, in a case, 12s.

In this map are given the whole of the military and civil stations, together with the principal towns, the villages being omitted, so as to make the stations more prominent. The colouring defines the boundaries of the three Presidencies and shows also the railways and telegraphs.

MAP of INDIA and CHINA, BURMAH, SIAM, the MALAY PENINSULA, and the EMPIRE of ANAM. On two sheets—Size, 4 ft. 8 in. wide; 3 ft. 4 in. high. 16s.; or, on cloth, in a case, £1. 5s.

MAP of the PUNJAB and SIKH TERRITORY. On one sheet, 5s.; or, on cloth, in a case, 6s.

MAP of AFGHANISTAN, and the ADJACENT COUNTRIES. On one sheet—Size 2 ft. 3 in. wide; 2 ft. 9 in. high. 9s.; or, on cloth, in a case, 12s.

MAP of CHINA, from the most Authentic Sources of Information. One large sheet—Size, 2 ft. 7 in. wide; 2 ft. 2 in. high. 8s.; or, on cloth, in a case, 11s.

MAP of the BURMAN EMPIRE, showing the Annexed District of Pegu. One sheet, 3s. 6d.; or, on cloth, in a case, 5s.

A MAP of the WESTERN PROVINCES of HINDOOSTAN, the PUNJAB, CABOOL, SINDE, BHAWULPORE, &c., including all the States between Candahar and Allahabad. On four sheets—Size, 4 ft. 4 in. wide; 4 ft. 2 in. high. 30s.; or, on cloth, in a case, £23; rollers, and varnished, £23. 10s.

MAP of ARABIA, from all the most recent Authorities, by order of the Court of Directors of the East India Company. Size, 3 ft. 3 in. high; 4 ft. 3 in. wide. On cloth, in a case, £1. 5s.

To prevent spurious imitations, please to observe that the words "KEATING'S COUGH LOZENGES" are engraved on the Government Stamp of each Box, without which none are genuine.

KEATING'S COUGH LOZENGES.

JUDGED BY THE IMMENSE DEMAND,

this UNIVERSAL REMEDY now stands the first in public favour and confidence; this result has been acquired by the test of fifty years' experience. These Lozenges may be found on sale in every British Colony, and throughout India and China they have been highly esteemed wherever introduced. For COUGHS, ASTHMA, and all affections of the Throat and Chest, they are the most agreeable and efficacious remedy.

Prepared and sold in Boxes, Tins, and Bottles of various sizes by THOMAS KEATING, Chemist, &c., 79, St. Paul's Churchyard, London. Sold retail by all Druggists and Patent Medicine Vendors in the World.

MR. HOWARD, Surgeon-Dentist, 52, Fleet-

street, has introduced an entirely new description of ARTIFICIAL TEETH, fixed without springs, wires, or ligatures. They so perfectly resemble the natural teeth as not to be distinguished from the originals by the closest observer. They will never change colour or decay, and will be found superior to any teeth ever before used. This method does not require the extraction of roots, or any painful operation, will support and preserve teeth that are loose, and is guaranteed to restore articulation and mastication. Decayed teeth stopped, and rendered sound and useful in mastication. 52, Fleet-street. At home from Ten till Five.

SARSAPARILLA.

WILKINSON'S (late BRIDGE'S)

ESSENCE OF FLUID EXTRACT OF RED JAMAICA SARSAPARILLA is appreciated for its Purity, and marked superiority, daily prescribed by the Faculty for Impurities of the Blood, Affections of the Liver, Constitutional Debility, Attenuation of Body, as an Alterative Medicine at the Changes of the Seasons, and for freeing the system from the effects of Mercury.

In India and the Colonies it is extensively used to prevent taking complaints incidental to Tropical Climates, and as a renovator of the system after Sickness invaluable.

"A superior preparation, that may always be relied on."—Sir Astley Cooper.

"We are in every respect satisfied with it."—Lancet.

"We recommend your Sarsaparilla as the best."—Medical Review.

"Latterly, in consequence of much debility, &c., subsequent to Cholera, I have freely used 'Bridge's Sarsaparilla' myself, with complete benefit and success."—J. Poett, F.R.C.S.

Sold in pints, half-pints, and quarter pints. One pint is equal to eight pints of the ordinary preparations.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.—The public are cautioned against cheap preparations of Sarsaparilla, which, instead of being what they profess, are nothing but a decoction of common herbs, sweetened with molasses, and flavoured with American Winter Green. The genuine has "Thos. Wilkinson (late Bridge and Co.), 270, Regent-street, London," engraved on each bottle.

AGREEABLE SEIDLITZ POWDER in one bottle, protected by a case with measure and spoon included. This preparation is highly recommended, not only as a Mild Aperient, but to allay Fever, Thirst, &c.

AROMATIC TINCTURE OF QUINODINE for the prevention of Fever, Intermittent or Remittent Ague, and other effects of Malaria. No person exposed to the influence of or predisposing cause of Fevers should be without it, for if taken in small doses daily the system will become so thoroughly impregnated with its principles as to be rendered proof against all attacks of Contagion or Malaria. Sold in pints, half-pints, and quarter-pints.

The above articles prepared only by Thos. Wilkinson (late Wilkinson, Bridge, & Co.), 270, Regent-street, London, W.

PRICHARD'S AROMATIC STEEL PILLS

stand unequalled for restoring vigour to weak and relaxed constitutions, and have been proved to be the best medicine ever offered to the public. To those who are suffering from languor and exhaustion occasioned by a residence in hot climates, these Pills will be found particularly beneficial. They give energy to the muscles and nerves, strength to the stomach, and completely renovate the system, so that the patient is astonished at the effects produced.

Prepared by W. PRICHARD, Apothecary, 65, Charing-cross, London. In boxes 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. May be had of all Medicine Vendors.

UNRIVALED in EXTERMINATING

Mosquitoes, Fleas, Bugs, Flies, Beetles, Cockroaches, and every description of insect infesting Animals and Poultry, protects Clothes, &c., from Moths. ONLY INJURIOUS TO INSECT LIFE. See that the name of THOMAS KEATING, 79, St. Paul's Churchyard, is on every Packet.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT and PILLS.

No Eruptions—Cold winds, heated rooms, and disordered stomachs display their deleterious effects upon the human skin. Roughness, irritation, eruptions about the mouth and nose, cracked lips, and chapped hands are readily cured by the application of Holloway's Ointment, which renders the skin soft and healthy. This Ointment is the best corrective of the red spots, dry patches, and irritable pimples incident to tender skin; it cures all the torments of such affections, and spurs their unsightly blemishes, which are not slight or questionable advantages. Holloway's Ointment never disagrees with the most sensitive skin. Ladies may use it with implicit confidence; they will find it exercises a deodorant influence whilst operating as a thoroughly detergent agent.

BY DAVID THOMAS ANSTED, M.A., F.R.S., &c.

AND

ROBERT GORDON LATHAM, M.A., M.D., F.R.S., &c.

The Illustrations drawn on Wood expressly for the Work, by PAUL J. NAPTEL, Member of the London Society of Painters in Water Colours.

"The 'Channel Islands' is an excellent book of its class—well conceived, well written, well illustrated, well printed. It is the produce of many hands, and every hand a good one. Nearly every thing which a man can desire to know about Jersey, Guernsey, Alderney, and Sark—about their history, Geography, and natural history—Professor Ansted and Dr. Latham have contrived to tell. Altogether the contents of the volume are as varied and interesting as a well-sustained drama; and to this drama no more graceful and picturesque scenery could have been furnished than we find in the illustrations so profusely given by artists worthy of the subject and equal to their worth—Paul Napfel and M. Petere Le Lièvre. The result is not a merely handsome volume of the old 'Keepsake' style, made to sell and be looked at, but a book of rare merit and value, made for instruction and delight, to be read with pleasure and to be referred to with profit."—Athenaeum, Nov. 15, 1862.

MAILS TO INDIA.

Mails to India and China, via Marseilles, are despatched from London as follows, viz.:—Those for Bombay packets, on the evening of the 3rd and 1st of each month; and those for Calcutta packets (including mails for Ceylon, Madras, and China), on the evenings of the 10th and 26th of each month. When any of these dates falls on a Sunday, the mails are made up on the following evening.

Letters and Newspapers can be forwarded to any part of India, via Bombay and Marseilles, and in most cases will reach their destination some days sooner than if despatched by the following Calcutta mail. The Bombay mails via Southampton, however, are no longer available for the transmission of Letters or Newspapers to the Madras Presidency.

Mails for the Mediterranean and all parts of India and China, except the Bombay Presidency, are despatched via Southampton on the mornings of the 4th and 20th, or, when either of these dates falls on Sunday, upon the previous evening.

Mails for the Mediterranean, the Presidency of Bombay, and Upper or North-West Provinces of Bengal and China, are despatched via Southampton on the 12th and 27th of the month, except when these dates fall on Sunday, in which case they are forwarded on the previous evening.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

In the Viceregal Council of India of Dec. 25th, Mr. Maine moved for leave to introduce a Bill for conferring upon the High Courts of Judicature in India the jurisdiction and powers vested in the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes in England. The object of the Bill was to give effect to the new policy introduced in the English High Courts Act passed in 1861. The Secretary of State for India has directed the Governor-general to confer jurisdiction in divorce cases on the High Court of Bengal, similar to that exercised in the Divorce Court in London. A question arose as to whether the decisions of the Bengal Court would be recognised out of India, some local authorities contending that they would not and others expressing some doubt upon the subject. When persons have been married in India, and their marriage has been dissolved by the High Court of Bengal, the English tribunals would consider the parties at liberty to marry again, but it was not certain whether, in the case of persons who had married in England and had their marriages dissolved in India, the English tribunals would recognise their right to re-marry. Sir Barnes Peacock was of opinion that persons married in England and divorced in India would be regarded in England as incapable of contracting a legitimate re-marriage. The difficulty has been referred to the law officers of the Crown in England.

The Englishman states that travellers down the country by the Great Trunk Road from the North-West Provinces to Calcutta give information that the road "is actually swarming with cotton." Enormous quantities of that most desirable article were en route to Calcutta for exportation. This is good news, indeed, especially if the cotton should turn out to be of the right quality.

The same paper speaks of Mr. Cecil Beadon as "the most popular Lieutenant-Governor that Bengal has yet had." We were quite aware that Mr. Beadon is one of the ablest of the Bengal civilians. No one questions his great talent and his extensive information; but when only a secretary to Government he occasionally exhibited a sternness and severity that seemed to indicate a deficiency of kindly feeling not common amongst Indian officials, and not calculated to win golden opinions from all sorts of people. The popular Governors in India have generally been men of apparently gentler nature and more courteous manners, and more open to personal sympathies. Mr. Beadon seems to be made of "sterner stuff," is somewhat rigid in his sense of official duty, and is not the man to suffer "compunctious visitings of nature" to slacken his hand in the punishment of a delinquent. He is a man of strong will and thoroughly honest intentions, but we confess to be rather surprised at his "popularity."

An event of some importance and significance is the appointment of a native of India to the Bench of the High Court of Bengal—Sumbho Nath Pundit. His countrymen ought to rejoice to see a native of India under the British Government in so high a post. We sincerely trust that he will so conduct himself as to show that the Government has not acted prematurely in conferring a post of such great responsibility on a native of India.

Dost Mahommed, it is thought, has a fair chance of taking Herat. The besieged are greatly distressed, it is said, for daily food, though previous accounts represented that they were amply provisioned against a very long siege.

The court martial on Lieutenant Jackson, Royal Engineers, for tying his native servant to a tree and beating him to death, closed its proceedings on the 23rd of December, but the finding and sentence are not yet known. It is generally supposed that he will be convicted of manslaughter, dismissed the service, and be sentenced to two years' imprisonment.

A number of sittings of an important missionary conference had taken place day after day at Lahore, presided over on some days by Sir Herbert Edwardes, and on other days by Colonel MacLagan, Mr. Perkins, and others. One of the questions raised was in what way the Bible should be introduced in native schools. It was suggested that Hindu and Mahomedan teachers should be allowed to explain the Scriptures, a duty which should be left exclusively to the missionaries themselves. The Government Grant-in-aid system was discussed and approved of. Many of the speakers expressed their earnest desire that zealous laymen should actively co-operate with professional missionaries in the great and good work of Hindoo conversion to Christianity. His Highness the Rajah of Kupperthul-lah was present on one occasion, and made an excellent speech in favour of native female education, but other natives remarked that as only the very lowest caste girls would attend the schools it was impossible for natives of rank and high caste to send their children to them. On one of the days of conference a good many natives were present, and behaved with great indecorum, by indulging in the most violent abuse of Christian missionaries as a body. At first some missionaries endeavoured to stop the torrent of invective, but Sir Herbert

MORE RETIRING SCHEMES.

We have received a lengthy communication on the subject of the articles that have lately appeared in our columns regarding the expediency of offering fresh terms to unemployed officers to induce them to retire.

It is admitted on all sides that these officers have been badly treated, and we submit, for the consideration of Government, the following modes in which they may be provided for:—

1st. Allow them, in addition to any pension to which they are entitled, the value of their commission in the Royal army; any officer not entitled to his pension might receive £100 for every year's service.

2nd. Permit an officer to retire on the full English pay of his rank, in addition to pension or bonus, as above.

Cavalry officers should receive some small additional gratuity, as their pay and advantages were greater than those of infantry officers. Again, it has been suggested to us that if a step of brevet rank was offered to these unfortunates, the bait would take in many instances. The justice of such an offer is apparent, as their promotion is actually stopped by the retention in the Army List of the officers who have taken the late bonus, and who should at once have been removed from the gradation list. This boon, if granted, would possess the recommendation of not entailing any cost on the Government, and would, we think, be sanctioned at home, if supported by the Viceroy in Council and the Commander-in-Chief.

In a recent article we stated that Government would save largely by treating their unemployed officers with liberality: our correspondent's statement of figures furnishes conclusive evidence on this point. We extract one or two of his examples. An unemployed lieutenant-colonel of infantry receives at a full batta station Rs. 1,032-4 monthly, or Rs. 12,387 per annum. Assuming that he does four years' duty as unemployed lieutenant-colonel, he will have cost the country in that time Rs. 47,548, and may retire on the pension of a colonel, instead of the lower scale to which he is now entitled.

An unemployed major of cavalry, during the same time, would cost the country Rs. 44,611 for the performance of a few trifling duties which would be done as well by a subaltern. We agree with our correspondent in thinking that his array of figures would startle the authorities, but as he will have seen in recent numbers of the Englishman that something is going to be done, we trust that he will excuse our not making any further extracts from his communication. The offer of an inducement, either in the shape of an annuity or bonus, is, we believe, decided on, and no doubt will be readily accepted by the unfortunates. We are of opinion that a bonus would be more acceptable than an additional annuity; it is of more value to the retiring officer as furnishing some provision for his family, and helping him to settle down in whatever corner of the world he determines on hiding his head; and if the bonus scheme is adopted, the Government can calculate with greater accuracy the probable cost of what we suppose must be called their liberality. Whatever may be resolved on, we would most strongly urge the justice, policy, and humanity of speedy action. The unfortunates, whose cause we advocate, have already been kept long enough in suspense; and the consequences have in many instances been painful in the extreme.

We hope that Sir Robert Napier will exert the great influence which his known rectitude of principle and steady application of it as his rule of duty both to the government he serves and the men who serve with or under him, and endeavour to obtain speedy justice for his brother officers. And we agree with our correspondent in thinking that, if he really exerts himself in the cause, he will carry the council with him, and thus prevent that absurd delay with which measures of justice to the service are generally carried out.—Englishman, Dec. 31.

Edwardes interfered, and expressed a hope that the natives might be indulged in the utmost freedom of discussion, and they took full advantage of the privilege granted to them. The missionaries sat silent for hours, but before the meeting separated expressed themselves deeply hurt by the attack upon them.

The death of Dr. Grierson, Inspector-General of Hospitals, at Bombay, has made a blank in the medical service of that Presidency. He was greatly esteemed by all who knew him, and his loss is very severely felt. He died on the 6th of January of aneurism of the heart.

His Excellency Sir Bartle Frere and his lady are in Bombay, and doing everything in their power to render their presence a public benefit.

The memorial of the Indian Civil Service on the subject of retiring pensions, and addressed to the Secretary for India, had not been successful. In future Government will give £600 per annum as a retiring pension, and any addition to that sum must be made up from the subscriptions of the annuitants. The noble retiring pension of a thousand a year is a thing of the past.

The Mhyjee Fair, held near the Pochora Station of the North-Eastern Line of the G. I. P. Railway, has commenced, and it is supposed will last about two months. Last year, merchandise to the value of nearly forty-six lakhs of rupees was sold at this fair. It is one of the most important traffic-meetings in India. Though the immediate neighbourhood of Mhyjee is now thinly peopled, it was, in the olden time, a place of great importance, and its ancient repute is still unforgotten. It was ravaged first by Holkar's army at the commencement of this century, and its ruin was completed by Bajee Rao in 1818. The railway will perhaps cause it to be reinstated in its former prosperity and importance. Some European houses at Bombay have sent large quantities of piece goods to the fair.

The Englishman reports that arrangements have been made between the Government and the East India Railway Company for forwarding the mails direct from Benares by express train on their arrival from Bombay. This arrangement was acted upon for the first time on the arrival of the last express at Benares; and instead of the three days hitherto occupied under the old system of dak runners, the mail was delivered in Calcutta in a little more than twenty-four hours of its receipt at Benares. As the railway extends in the direction of Bombay, towards which it is making rapid strides, it will become a serious question whether it would not be advisable to discontinue entirely the route round Galle in favour of the weekly mail to Bombay.

The S.S. Jason is reported to have been totally lost within four miles of Madras. The passengers and cargo were saved. It is reported that she was under the command of the same captain who ran the same vessel ashore on the coast of Africa on her last homeward trip. Lady Elgin lost all her personal baggage in the Jason. Her ladyship was expected to arrive in Calcutta by the Feroze, on Monday, the 5th of January, when all sorts of gaieties were to be carried on, amongst them a grand fancy ball at Government House. The Englishman newspaper originated a report that a Confederate privateer had been seen cruising in the Bay of Bengal. There was no foundation for the report.

The Cossyah revolt is likely to be very soon entirely suppressed. Some of the villages have already submitted to the Government.

We mentioned in our last that the Delhi Gazette and the newspaper Press of India had been rather severely and unjustly treated by a writer in a London periodical. The Delhi Gazette is now in its turn the assailant, not of the whole London Press, but of all those Anglo-Indians at home who contribute articles to it.

The Delhi Gazette mentions by name some of the best known of four Anglo-Indian writers. Messrs. Alexander Forbes, Meredith Townsend, J. O. B. Saunders, Paterson Saunders, Laman Blanchard, John Marshman, and though last, not least, J. W. Kaye. These, says the Delhi Gazette, are amongst the writers at home from whom the British public have to imbibe their lessons on Indian questions. Mr. Forbes was once editor of the Bengal Hurkaru, Mr. Townsend of the Friend of India, Mr. J. O. B. Saunders of the Englishman, Mr. Paterson Saunders of the Bengal Hurkaru, Mr. Marshman of the Friend of India, Mr. Blanchard of the Mofussilite, and then of the Hurkaru, and Mr. Kaye of the latter paper. Here is a strong company of Indian editors now on the London press, who, according to the Delhi Gazette, are misleading the public mind of England on Oriental questions. We hear, on the same authority, that the Calcutta Englishman is about to establish a branch newspaper in London, where, indeed, there is already a weekly paper of the same name, founded on the once well-known Atlas newspaper, which in its lifetime issued an Atlas for India; and its successor with a new name also prepares a paper for the outward mail to the East.

LATEST INTELLIGENCE.

THE SUDDER AT AGRA.

We now proceed to narrate the particulars of the second cause célèbre by which Mr. Carnac, the Judge of Ghazepore, has achieved a somewhat unenviable immortality. This case has already been briefly noticed in the Friend of India, but the public cannot fully appreciate the merits of the whole procedure without a full exposition of its various parts. The following are the facts:—A civil suit was instituted in the Court of the Principal Sudder Ameen of Ghazepore, for the purpose of setting aside a deed of sale of a small house held by one Madut Ali, on the ground that the plaintiff held a prior deed, which had been duly registered. No charge or allegation, either of fraud or forgery, was made; but preference for the registered deed was claimed by the holder of it. The plaintiff obtained a decree on this ground alone, and the Principal Sudder Ameen, in passing that decree, recorded nothing whatever to justify any charge of forgery or fabrication against Madut Ali. Madut Ali appealed to the Judge, still stoutly maintaining the validity of his own deed. While the case was before the Judge, in appeal, he chose to suspect that Madut Ali's deed was a forgery, and thus suspecting (whether rightly or wrongly it does not concern us now to inquire), he held a robikaree, and placed his suspicion of this single fact upon record, with a view to future proceedings against the appellant. So far all is unobjectionable. Mr. Carnac could not help his suspicions, and was justified in recording them. The accuracy of those suspicions, had the legal course been pursued, would have been tested by inquiry; and discharge or commitment would have been the result. The mode of procedure is clearly and unmistakably laid down in the law. A civil court entertaining, after summary inquiry, a suspicion of forgery, has the option of two separate methods; one under section 171, under which he makes over the suspected party for trial by the magistrate, who, after full and deliberate investigation, either discharges the prisoner or commits him to the Sessions Court; the other, under section 173, which permits him, instead of making over the prisoner to the magistrate for trial, to complete the investigation himself, "and then commit the prisoner, if the crime is proved, to himself as Sessions Judge, the magistrate merely preparing the calendar and securing the attendance of the witnesses." In either case, as is obvious from the law itself, a full, deliberate, and complete preliminary investigation, including, of course, the defence of the prisoner, is a sine qua non before the commitment is made to the Sessions Court. With that sublime indifference, however, to law and reason, which seems to elevate our hero above all ordinary judicial restrictions, Mr. Carnac quietly dispensed with each and either of these to him supererogatory steps, and, with nothing whatever to go upon but his own vague idea, without deigning to give his victim the slightest opportunity of explanation or defence, without any evidence to support his own void suspicions, he commits the prisoner to the Sessions Court—that is, to his own proper self—for trial.

But although Mr. Carnac thus waived the intermediate investigation required by law, his mind had not been altogether idle. The commitment did not, strange to say, take place at once. It was not till two months after he had recorded the proceeding, which we have mentioned above, that he held the further proceeding, ordering the commitment. During this interval, though nothing outwardly transpired, a very active internal process had evidently been going on in the Judge's mind. The first robikaree had declared the Judge's belief that Madut Ali was guilty of a single offence. The second robikaree, directing the commitment, presented no less than five more offences, which, during the mysterious interval of silent incubation, had been generated in Mr. Carnac's brain, and were then loosed upon the unwitting prisoner, who, without further warning, notice, or opportunity of explanation, found himself committed for trial by Mr. Carnac, the Civil Judge, to Mr. Carnac, the Judge of Sessions, on no other ground whatever but the bare suspicion of that gentleman in his former capacity. During the sixty days' interval between the first record of the Judge's "idea" and the final commitment, the unhappy prisoner presented several petitions, both to the Judge and Magistrate, praying that some inquiry should at least be made before he was committed to the Sessions; that his accusers and judge would at least condescend to hear what he had to say for himself; but these applications were unheeded. The magistrate was powerless, as he could only execute the orders issued; the judge was inexorable, and seemed to think it quite sufficient that he had suspected the prisoner, and all further inquiry was superfluous. We now come to the darkest part of the monstrous proceedings, and call the attention of Government to the scandalous fact. Having secured the prisoner's commitment in defiance of the law, and in supreme contempt of all principles of justice, Mr. Carnac, it might have been supposed, would have at least been careful that before the Sessions Court itself the prisoner should be fairly dealt with. As all intermediate inquiry had been omitted, and no opportunity whatever given to the prisoner of offering explanation or defence, either before the magistrate or civil judge, it certainly might have been expected that the fullest opportunity would be afforded him for exculpation at the final trial.

But not so do the facts run. When the trial came on the document was exhibited, when a subscribing witness was being examined the document was shown to him, and he was asked whether the signature affixed was his. He answered in the affirmative, and repeated the answer more than once. These answers were never recorded; and on the unhappy prisoner remonstrating with the Judge, that amiable officer flew into a paroxysm of rage, abused him from the bench in the most disgusting terms, and then, without taking from him any defence whatever, passed upon him the vindictive sentence of ten years' imprisonment, Rs. 2,000 fine, and confiscation of his entire property, real and personal.

Further comment on these disgraceful doings is superfluous. We have discharged our duty, and now wait to see whether a paternal Government, whose profession of principle it is to rule the country, not by fear, but through the affections of a contented people, will lend its sanction to judicial iniquities which we venture to say are unparalleled in the annals of modern civilised administration.—Englishman, Dec. 30.

MR. BEADON AS LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR.

When Mr. Beadon took his seat as Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, the public, although prepared to receive him with favour, looked forward to the policy he might adopt with some degree of doubt. His recent conversion to a policy of progress, and his former opposition, contributed in no light degree to prevent the general public from coming to any definite conclusion as to the place he was to hold in its estimation. This was a benefit both for that public and the Lieutenant-Governor. It disposed the former to view the latter's actions with candour, if not with favour, and it left Mr. Beadon himself untrammelled by the obligation of working up to a pre-conceived standard. The result has been that he is, to-day, the most popular Lieutenant-Governor Bengal has had, and that his popularity promises rather to increase than diminish. His government, too, is both energetic and progressive, as shown by the recent correspondence with the Assam Company, and earlier, by his adoption of the Public Works policy of Sir J. P. Grant, and by the extent and character of his late tour. Mr. Beadon, too, seems determined to gather about him the flower of the Civil Service; men who are capable of doing something more than merely decide an Act X. case, and whose presence at his side will render his administration all that the country could desire. This it was which led him to select Mr. Genghegan for his secretariat, and which induced him, in spite of the popular misgivings, to place the junior though able civilian, the Hon. Ashley Eden, at its head. And here we may remark that, like most men with strong minds, Mr. Beadon has a strong will, and is about the last man to pass over an officer because of a popular clamour against him, unless he were convinced that the outcry was well founded. Mr. Beadon has also followed a course which it would have been well for his predecessor to have taken,—he has let us know him; he has made the acquaintanceship of the public, instead of shutting himself up, and deciding the questions which may happen to come before him by the light of an office memorandum. This course we can assure him is the right one, inasmuch as while it does not pledge him to consult the wishes of the public, it yet shows that public that he is willing to give its wishes all due consideration. On the whole we think Bengal may congratulate itself upon having a Governor who neither contemns the public voice nor is at daggers-drawn with the Supreme Government. Of Mr. Beadon's subordinates we may take leave to say a few words. Mr. Genghegan, one of the best of the competition-wallahs, is likely to do more service, and good service, too, in the Secretariat, than as an assistant-magistrate. He is a man who can work every bit as hard as he can think, and that is about the greatest praise we can give his capacity for labour. We are much mistaken if he be not one who will yet make his mark in the service; and we think that the Lieutenant Governor gives the fairest promise a statesman can give a public, when he shows that he has the penetration to select such men, and the courage to employ them, notwithstanding their juniority in the ranks of the civilians. Mr. Eden is well known; late events have thrown him to the top, and he appears to be a man quite able to keep the place. It was a bold thing to do, to appoint so young a man, and one against whom so much has been said and written, to officiate as secretary to the Government of Bengal; but the result has shown that the wisdom of the chief has been able to restrain the impetuosity of the lieutenant, and Mr. Eden has, during his short tenure of office, satisfied everyone and won the good opinion of all. The end in this case has certainly justified the means. We trust the policy of putting the right man in the right place will be carried out. We are quite sure it is one which would draw down no animadversions, and which would decidedly benefit the country. It would have the effect of a revival amongst the civilians, and would soon clear the desks of such officials as commissioners and judges of the accumulations of arrears, at which those overwrought officers now gape and gasp with feelings of the liveliest astonishment and most profound disgust. No better instrument to carry such an idea into effect could be found than the Hon. Ashley Eden; and hence we are sorry to see him give place to one who would make an excellent Revenue Commissioner, or a Sudder Judge, supposing that ancient and venerable specimen of circumlocution had been in existence. We have always held it to be a mistake to place as secretaries about our governors men who, by reason of their long standing, have succeeded in overlaying their experience with a thick coat of habit and routine, and who have forgotten, with their youth and prime, the boldness which would sacrifice precedent to a conviction, and what has been done to what should be done. Where, as in India, the head of the Executive has to do so much of a secretary's labour himself, an infusion of young blood is of the greatest possible use. It has, moreover, been found to answer elsewhere, as in the Punjab, and, we doubt not, would not prove a very lamentable failure in Bengal. Experience, we admit, is highly valuable; but an experience which is of another age, or which is habitually fortifying itself by precedents, is worthless, if not positively harmful. Mr. Beadon has shown a disposition to confer as many benefits upon us as he can. There is one, however, which he might materially assist in bestowing, and which would, besides, be doing himself no small service—we mean the destruction of that ancient impediment to good Government, the Revenue Board. We have before this advocated its abolition, in favour of a Revenue Secretaryship in the Bengal Office; and of late we have heard several rumours, that what we have so long wished will at last probably take place. To detail the faults of the Board of Revenue, or the reasons for its destruction, would be superfluous. We know that the work could be done cheaper and better by a Revenue Secretary, unencumbered with a Board, and deriving his inspiration direct from the Lieutenant Governor. In this case, too, we should look forward to seeing a veritable and efficient Financial Department doing for Bengal what ought to have been done long ago. If the Board be abolished, then we would recommend the transfer of Mr. Lushington, with a slightly increased salary, to the post of Secretary in the Revenue Department for Bengal, and the return of Mr. Eden to the duties generally performed by the present Secretariat. Meanwhile we congratulate the public and Mr. Beadon upon the results of his administration thus far.—Englishman.

MISCELLANEOUS.

LORD GEORGE PAGET.—We thought our memory had not played us false in mixing up Lord George Paget in the same category with the illustrious "Dowb," as a person "to be taken care of" somehow; and India seems to have been selected wherein to make his bed of roses. We remember, now we brush up our recollections, the circumstances under which the then commanding officer of the 4th Light Dragoons—popularly known in the service at that day as Paget's Irregulars—left his comrades in arms at the crisis of the Crimean war to all the dangers and discomforts of the siege, and bolted off home on "urgent private affairs." We remember the comments made upon his reception at her Majesty's table within a few days of his return, and that such was the flagrancy of the case, that public opinion, which is generally so lenient to the little lapses of lords, especially with such a name as Paget, yet set so strongly and loudly adverse that his lordship found it advisable to go back again. We remember, also, that when the Lucans and Aireys of the campaign were rewarded for their noble failures both of duty and capacity, Lord George Paget was also rewarded for his little run home and back again with a brand new berth, no less than Inspector-General of Cavalry in India; with a view, we presume, to his known capacity in the manufacture of "irregulars." We remember, also, to the lasting honour of the then existing Court of Directors, that they refused to sanction his appointment, and adhered successfully to their refusal. But now-a-days we know how Indian armies and Indian interests have been amalgamated into a preserve for such high personages as the friends of Sir Charles Wood, and "Royals" with good interest. We know to how many a tried Indian officer this Sirhind command would have been only a just reward for good service, and the fulfilment of an honourable ambition. We know how, even if our good things must be had for the Royals, there are many such whose Crimean and other services can be recalled with unalloyed satisfaction and just pride, and whose claims for consideration would be as cheerfully accorded in India as in England; in preference to one whose sole claim on India is that he was very near coming out six years ago. But we know also that though Lord George Paget has no better claims now than when the Court of Directors became to him an impassable Court of Rejectors—there is no help for us; inasmuch as we cannot hope to appeal to the public opinion of England, which has long forgotten the defeated job, and never had any especial care for the interest of India in the matter. We only note this sign of the times; how Indian claims are disregarded, and how in matters military, as in matters civil, India has become the shuttlecock to be bandied backwards and forwards between Secretaries of State, with "friends" like the Mysore princes, and Horse Guards chiefs, with friends like Lord George Paget. Between them India seems likely to have a nice time of it.—Englishman, Jan. 2.

MAJOR GENERAL LORD GEORGE PAGET, just arrived from England, is to be brought upon the divisional staff of the army in Bengal, will be appointed to the command of the Sirhind division, in succession to Lieut.-General Sir R. Garrett, who does not return to India. Captain the Hon. A. Chichester, of the late 5th Bengal Light Cavalry, will be Lord Paget's aide-de-camp. Colonel Rennie, of H.M.'s 31st Regiment, has held the officiating command of the Sirhind division since Sir R. Garrett's departure for Europe.—Englishman.

EAST INDIAN RAILWAY.—We understand that two serious accidents have occurred on the East Indian Railway. It appears that the up-passenger train of Saturday was thrown off the line on entering Rajmahal. In the second case the down Dinapore passenger train of Sunday was, through some cause or other, thrown off the line at Futwah. We have not yet heard any particulars, but from inquiry we find that the last accident delayed the arrival of the down mail into Howrah for several hours. In both cases we are informed that the passengers have escaped without the slightest injury. Full inquiries must be made by the railway authorities into the causes of these accidents, and we trust that, for the re-assurance of the travelling public, the Government will for once depart from its rule of reticence in regard to railway matters.—Englishman.

H.M.'s 92ND GORDON HIGHLANDERS.—The volunteering from H.M.'s 92nd Gordon Highlanders in Fort William for regiments up-country speaks well for the popularity of soldiering in India at the present time, as we do not remember ever before to have seen so large a number of men thrown off from a departing corps for prolonged service in this country. Over five hundred men volunteered within the three days assigned, but as about eighty retracted, the list closed with a total of four hundred and sixteen soldiers, the highest number, about a hundred, going to H.M.'s 107th, late 3rd European regiment, and the lowest to the 42nd Highlanders, which, as we said the other day, was "mentioned without veneration," and got two volunteers. The remainder went chiefly to H.M.'s 79th Highlanders and 90th L.I., with small parties to H.M.'s 93rd Highlanders and 98th foot. The 92nd Highlanders will, however, even after the above strong diminution, go home to England five hundred strong. The orders from England are to send the 92nd home as soon as it can possibly be effected; and as H.M.'s 43rd are ready at hand, they will, we believe, come down from Barrackpore to relieve the 92nd, should the arrival of the 1st battalion of H.M.'s 13th L.I. be much delayed.

THE 1ST BATTALION OF H.M.'S 13TH L.I., which is coming to the Presidency to relieve H.M.'s 92nd Highlanders in Fort William, commenced its march from Gwalior on the 23rd Dec.; and as it is but seven marches from Gwalior to Agra, and the rest of the distance, with the exception of two days' bullock-train between Allahabad and Benares, will be traversed by rail, the battalion ought to reach Fort William about the 10th Jan. Formerly, under the marching system, it would have taken a regiment something near three months to reach the Presidency from Gwalior—a fact strongly illustrative of the multiplication of military strength and efficiency by the railway, and which ought to make the Government put on the screw to expedite progress and completion in certain quarters that we could mention.

THE GREAT EASTERN HOTEL COMPANY.—A Shareholder in the Great Eastern Hotel Company seems very irate at the proposition to establish a Board of Directors in London. As we are not shareholders, we have probably little to do with a question whose public importance is limited to those immediately interested in the undertaking. We must, however, in justice to our correspondent, say that we quite agree with him, that as the business of the hotel and the other branches of the trade connected with it, are carried on exclusively in India, a London direction cannot be a necessity, and, judging from what has been experienced by other companies, may be an incumbrance; an agent should be able to do all that was required, the more so as all the duties which it is proposed that the directorate should discharge are anticipatory. The report distinctly says that on the shares taken up in England nothing has been paid. The shareholders, therefore, will not, we suppose, require any assistance in getting their dividends, as there will be none due to them, and as such shares will, in the present flourishing state of the company, be forfeited or distributed to the shareholders who have paid, it will not require a London board to make the transfer. We are glad to observe that the six months' profits provide for so large a dividend, after putting an equal amount to the reserve fund, which we consider very judicious. Grumblers may, however, say that if, as is stated in the report, the losses by bad debts are not likely to exceed two per cent., the setting aside so large a sum as Rs. 85,000 was unnecessary. We, however, believe that such an estimate, even though based on twenty-five years' individual experience, is fallacious, as we believe the directors will eventually find out. Dealing as they do in perishable wares, they have also a serious contingency to deal with beyond bad debts, which they have, no doubt, taken into consideration.—Englishman, Dec. 23.

SAUGOR, Dec. 19.—Sir Hope Grant does not meet Sir Hugh Rose at Jubbulpore after all, but goes straight up to Lucknow, and will be there about the 20th proximo. Major Biddulph, R.A., the Military Secretary, accompanies Sir Hope. The Commander-in-chief had a good look at the Jhansi troops when there. His Excellency is expected to be at Saugor to-day. From Saugor the camp with his Excellency will go as far as Dumoh, and thence the camp will go to Subhagunge, on the Great Deccan Road, while the chief and his staff go round by Jubbulpore. The staff with his Excellency consists of Colonel Saral, Military Secretary, Colonel Johnson, Adjutant-general, Colonel Torrens, Captain Ravenhill, Major Roberts, Captains Moore and Burne. There has been a great fire at Rohtuck, but it only consumed kirbee; the illumination was, however, seen for miles round.

EAST INDIAN RAILWAY.—INFORMATION WANTED.—The East Indian Railway, under the peculiar influences of a Governmental connection, are so reticent respecting matters which in other countries have the widest possible publicity, that though we have been officially made aware within the last few days of so important a matter to the public service as the opening of the railway throughout from the metropolis to the Holy City, we are quite without any information as to whether the trains start also to-day from Benares to this place, and are altogether in the dark as to railway "times and seasons." We have referred to the short official advertisement, in hope of finding some clue as to whether we may hope for the Bombay Express coming through by the newly opened line. All we find is a reference to "time-bills," which we suppose are to be found at the Howrah station, if indeed any be yet printed. In England, or rather in all the civilised world where newspapers are known, excepting only India, such information is fully advertised long beforehand; but here, even after the event, if we "want to know you know" anything about railway travelling under the paternal care of a government which talks progression and development at every opportunity, we can learn nothing about the railway except at the railway station across the river. No one on this side ever knows anything, and the few who know on the other side are not always to be met with, nor always in a communicative mood when found. We have just tossed up, in default of a better mode of deciding the railway chances, and as our rupee has come down "tails," we suppose the Express will not come by rail, but that the postal authorities will stick to the banghy and the runners until the absentee Director-general of Post-offices can be made aware in his mountain retreat that a new railway route has been discovered, by an officious sub somewhere up-country. Having promptly dismissed such a troublesome official, that talented inventor, whose sole achievement in three years is officially reported to have been the discovery of a failure in an improvement in mail carts, will probably institute an enquiry as to what arrangements can be made for the railway to carry the mail carts and banghys. For as banghys, mail carts, and permanently absent Directors-general all hang together as an integral part of the Indian official cosmogony, of course mail carts and banghys cannot be abolished, or the other part of the official postal lumber might feel itself unsafe. Once begin with superseding old machinery and there is no telling where supercession might stop. A railway which keeps its time tables in the dark is in harmony with such a department as the Post-office whose head is on permanent leave of absence some thousand miles or so away from his office. And between them we cannot even guess at what is to be the order of the day for our Bombay mails.—Englishman, Dec. 22.

SIR ROBERT NAPIER'S ADDRESS TO THE NATIVE STUDENTS OF DR. DUFF'S CALCUTTA FREE CHURCH INSTITUTION.—At the thirty-second annual examination Sir Robert Napier addressed, amid marked silence, the great body of assembled youth, nearly as follows:—"I had very great satisfaction in accepting Dr. Duff's invitation to preside at the anniversary of this institution, which for upwards of thirty years has been disseminating the benefits of education through this land. For about the same period of time I have been associated with natives of this country in many difficult undertakings, and have invariably met with loyal assistance, and zealous service from princes and chiefs—from Zemindars and inferior agents—from the lowest labouring classes. Our association has been marked with mutual confidence and good will, and I have the warmest regard for the country and the people of India. It is, therefore, with the deepest, the most serious, but most cheering reflections, that I see the masses of my Indian fellow-subjects pressing forward to obtain the advantages of education which here flows in a full and rich stream—constantly throwing off fresh rills of life to fertilise the human fields which they traverse. The thirst for improved knowledge of every kind which I see here gives the utmost hope and confidence for the future. You who are now leaving the institution, laden with well gained honours, with the admiration and applause of your friends and companions, remember that the most prominent characteristic of the greatest and most eminent learned men has been their humility. You must remember that, though you have acquired a considerable degree of learning, you have as yet but gained the key, which will open to you the stores of knowledge—the inventions of to-day—the accumulated wisdom of ages. The key which you have gained, with laudible diligence and labour, will open to you the histories of good and great men of the present time and of antiquity, and enable you to find high standards of excellence for your guidance in life. Let each one of you fix for himself the highest standard of excellence by which to guide his life—to learn to do his duty to his Maker, to himself and family, to his friends and neighbours, and to every living being that is within his influence. We have heard something of Young Bengal from you to-day: let the name of Young Bengal be, not as your enemies and detractors would say, a name synonymous with freedom from the restraints of all religion, with all kinds of sensual indulgence. Let the name of Young Bengal be proverbial as representing an upright, honest, truthful, diligent, God-fearing man. In your future career, if you find any laws or political institutions that you may feel to be irksome, remember that there are such in all countries; that you enjoy a degree of civil and religious liberty which is absent from many even of the favoured nations in Europe; that, if there are some things which Government does not do for you which you think expedient, though it may not do all you desire, or that it desires to do for you, still it does do a great deal for you; that if its protecting hand were taken from you for a month, or even a week, you would fall into innumerable evils. If, in your future career in life, you find some European treat you with less consideration and kindness than you have received from those who have befriended you, taught you, and watched over you in this institution, do not set that down as a debt against the nation to which he belongs, but rather consider that it is the imperfection of individual temper, or the roughness acquired in rubbing shoulders with the world, in a much harder battle for life and subsistence than you have to endure in this naturally favoured and productive land. Remember that there are people in a far distant land whom you know not, but who think of you with benevolent feelings; who love you and give part of their hard earnings that you may be taught, and share in the enlightenment of Europe. Remember that they have sent you your venerable teacher, who, for upwards of thirty years, has laboured with zeal, devotedness, and love, approaching that of the Apostles of old, to assist and benefit you—as also his able and willing associates. And the only recompense they look for is to hear that you have duly improved, in the highest and widest sense, by all the advantages they have placed within your reach."—Friend of India.

DELHI PRIZE-MONEY.—We are sorry to state, from inquiries which we have made upon the subject, that those whose hopes and expectations tend towards a further indulgence in Delhi prize-money had better restrict their visions to something very light and airy, as any future instalment that may be forthcoming will be of very attenuated proportions indeed. In the commencement of the year it was calculated that the next instalments of this prize-money to be issued would be larger than the first; but since then the authorities having admitted, or encouraged, or invited, the claims of all descriptions of forces, contingents, and co-operatives, camp followers, syces, kalasses, sweepers, coolies, &c., the shares of the real captors of Delhi have dwindled down to infinitesimal smallness, and will, we fear, be scarce worth the taking. Thus end the profits and rewards of the army of Delhi.—Englishman.

THE INDIAN POLICE.—A work has been published in India entitled "The Indian Police, or How to Catch Thieves, Suppress Crime, and Reduce the Army and Taxes throughout India. By K. Joyce Perceval, formerly Superintendent of the Detective and Dockyard Police of Bombay, and afterwards Superintendent of the Egyptian Police, Egypt." This is a kind of catechism, each subject being introduced by question and answer. Thus,—“What influence have the public police over the community?” “Why have detective qualities been so rare among the Indian Police, &c., &c.?” And so on, the answer to each question containing the information which Mr. Perceval is kind enough to offer the department gratis. To show his credentials, as it were, and to establish his right thus to instruct “ex cathedra,” he gives us an anecdote or two relating to his experiences, one of which we extract for the edification of the police and the amusement of our readers:—"A personal friend of mine, whose wife was more beautiful than virtuous, was one morning found murdered in his library. From the marks of blood found on the wall, and other signs, it was plain that there was more than one connected with the murder. As soon as I heard of the melancholy tidings, I proceeded to his house; but, not knowing that the body was lying in the library, I proceeded as usual to the sitting room upstairs; where, to my astonishment and disgust, I found his wife in 'cheerful conversation' with a young Jew, whose hand I noticed was severely cut, and his face very much scratched. After conversing with the widow, and arranging for the funeral, I proceeded to the library, and on looking about me I saw a signet ring, which I picked up, with the letters T. V. engraved upon it. Not knowing to whom the ring belonged, I delivered it to the lady of the house, telling her where I had found it. She took it as coolly as if it was a 'lump of ice,' and calling the servant, to whom she delivered it, told him to be careful of it, as very likely its real owner would one day or other claim it. I said nothing at the time, but thought within myself that the owner of the ring must be the murderer of my friend. After the funeral was over I never again entered the house, and seldom or ever heard of the widow or her doings. Some months after the occurrence I resigned command of the Police of Alexandria, and turned my attention to trade. Three days after I changed my profession in life, and entered the New Bourse on business, the first person I met with was the Jew whom I noticed on the day of the death of my friend. Upon closer examination I found that he had the signet ring already mentioned on his hand. Being no longer in the police, I could take no active measures against him; but I was determined, if possible, for my own satisfaction, to prove if he was really the murderer. I found that he was a very early riser, and used to go to the Marine Baths between the hours of five and six o'clock in the morning. I went to a mask seller and ordered him to procure for me the ugliest mask he could find. He obtained one for me, from a person employed at the theatre. I got a black beard made something like the beard of my deceased friend; and I painted my neck and breast with red paint, and then procured six live eels; which I fastened to my mask. Having everything arranged, I proceeded to the bath, and before going to bathe, I conversed with the Jew, who was then in the water. I went into my room and undressed, after which I jumped into the bath, carrying with me my mask, which I kept under water. Finding the Jew was busily engaged, I took the first opportunity of putting on the mask, and dived under water; passing close to where he was bathing, I upset him—and pulled him after me into deep water. I immediately rose, threw myself on my back, and dragged him by the hand to where he could find a footing. As soon as I found him there, I ducked him twice under water; and as soon as he was slightly recovered, I put my mouth to his ear, and told him that I was Dr. R., and had come to take him away for the part he had taken in my murder. He opened his eyes, stared at my mask, and seeing the live eels fastened to it, which, together with my 'Red painted breast,' terrified him almost to death, he fell back against one of the supports of the bath, around which he clasped his arms, to prevent his falling; then he stared at me like a madman, and loudly confessed that he had murdered Dr. R. by order of his wife, who had also assisted him in the perpetration of the deed. He afterwards fainted, and was carried away from the bath more dead than alive. A few days after he fled from Alexandria, and I have since heard he committed suicide in Malta." We strongly recommend the superintendent of police to instruct his officers in this sort of thing. We can imagine the feelings of a criminal while quietly taking his bath, perfectly innocent of all idea of apprehension, suddenly seized round the waist under the water by the superintendent general of police, North-West Provinces, with his breast painted red, stuck all over with live eels, and grinning horribly at his victim. Instant confession or loss of reason would be the inevitable result.—Delhi Gazette.

JHANSI, Dec. 19.—The Commander-in-Chief had a brigade day on the 17th. The force consisted of H.M.'s 80th, the 31st N.I., 34th N.I., 16th B.C., two batteries of artillery, and a part of another (I know not what) native cavalry, under the command of the commanding officer at present at Jhansi. All seemed to go off well. The troops had not been manœuvred together before, but there seemed to be no mistake. His Excellency, as usual, went to the front. Points were remarked; yet there was nothing that was remarkable. All left the ground pleased as far as I know. The chief left for Sultanpore on the 18th. Head quarters camp goes off to-morrow towards Cawnpore.—Dec. 23.—A salute this morning announced the arrival of Maharajah Scindiah. He had a regiment of foot and a detachment of cavalry, and some guns. His camp is on the other side of the city, i.e., away from the cantonments. His Highness rode in on a splendid Arab horse, being preceded by his cavalry escort; then came the infantry, and last the guns. He has his men dressed with those French shaped hats, and at a distance you might mistake them for Europeans (forgive the remark!); but the closer inspection soon dispels the illusion, not for step, remember, but a coat often makes a man look different, and a hat is a hat even on a pole. Your correspondent cannot say what the "grand doings" will be; time will tell. I suppose a nautch and a darbar will be about all. When the "big swell" has just seen the Chief this station will, probably, be small in his estimation. It is to be hoped he has not forgotten his boxes of champagne! These very often "cover his movements," if we may judge from the description given of his liberal entertainments wherever he goes. I hear that he purposes having out his troops for a brigade day; but this is a mere report. I have heard of his review at Morar, which was magnificent, if "jewels" on his officers can be taken as the proof. The Commander-in-chief has left, and we are now as dull as ever. As regards excitement, his visit, however, made us on the alert, and I doubt much if a more rigid, yet just, disciplinarian is to be found in the British army.—D. c. 28.—The Commander-in-chief inspected the 36th N. I. at Lullutpore on Saturday, and we hear that he was pleased with the corps. His Excellency went off the next day to look at a fort some seventeen miles from that station. He left on Monday morning. Maharajah Scindiah is still here, and is busily engaged with his lumberdars. Some talk of his giving a darbar. He will probably be here a week or ten days more. Christmas passed off as usual in such out-of-the-way places; and now we hear that the Brigadier from Morar will pay us a visit; when, is not yet known.

Lahore, Dec. 15.—Mr. Forsyth, the Commissioner of Lahore, who has been visiting that part of his district lying in the Rechna Doab, has now returned to the station. Captain Dyas, also the eminent engineer of the Baree Doab Canal, has passed through Lahore on his way to Dhera Ismael Khan, and it is said that an extension of the Baree Doab Canal is shortly to be made, which will connect Umritsur with the Ravee. The project mooted some few months ago for connecting Umritsur with the Sutlej by a short canal is also likely to be carried out at no very distant period. A traction engine belonging to the Oriental Inland Steam Company is now at Mooltan, and its arrival at Lahore is daily expected. It is to steam up the Mooltan road, and at Mooltan it has excited great interest among the native population. Such engines appear to be widely applicable in this part of India. The roads are generally very level, and all the main roads are kunkered, and are smooth and hard as to be almost as good as railways to run engines upon. In India traction engines appear to be destined to be subservient to most important uses, and they are applicable over a wide area of country at once, since they do not require other roads to run them upon than those which exist already. The music in the Lahore church is now attracting much attention from its excellence, and it is probably the best in India. The instrument used is not an organ, but a powerful harmonium; and the singers, male and female, display much taste and skill in the performance of their duties. The Lahore Chronicle of Saturday contains an interesting narrative of the early history of the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Company, which will no doubt attract a good deal of attention in India, the company being an Indian institution, and the facts narrated being but little known. I send you a copy of this article. Dr. Paton, the Director-general of the Post office, is at present at Lahore, and here his administration is far from popular, as its whole drift is to impede action, to erect barriers against improvement, and to smother intelligent zeal by official cobwebs. He is also said to encourage clandestine complaints of subordinates against their superiors, and on all of these grounds he has been vigorously attacked by our local organ so soon as he arrived here. He is desirous, it seems, of abolishing the office of Postmaster-general of the Punjab and Scinde, and certainly all his policy has been to reduce that office to a nonentity by irregular and officious interference. But this intermeddling had only had the effect of making the Post-office administration of this district even less efficient than it is elsewhere, and loud and deep have therefore been the complaints about the Post-office, emanating from Agra, Delhi, and Lahore. It is quite impossible for any man, or even for an angel from heaven, to administer himself the affairs of the Post-office all over India—from Prome to Peshawur, from Dalhousie to Tinnevely, and the assumption of such impossible duties certainly indicates more courage than discretion. Colonel Bruce, the able officer who is head of the police in India, lately came hither from Calcutta, and was the guest of our esteemed and respected governor. Colonel Bruce has since gone to Mooltan on his way to Bombay.

Two TRIALS.—Two more remarkable trials appear lately, on a private of the 77th at Hazareebagh, and on another of the 82nd at Delhi. In the first case, Private Carney was tried on two charges—in the first instance, of making use of abusive language to Surgeon Holton, at the regimental hospital; and in the second instance of striking the same officer. He is sentenced to receive fifty lashes and three years' imprisonment with hard labour. In the second case, Private Wilson assaults, by striking, his superior officer, John Umpleby, a corporal, and is sentenced to four years' penal servitude. Both awards of punishment are confirmed and approved by Sir Hugh Rose, so we are led to believe that a minor offence should be punished with a severe sentence, and a case where life is involved is to be treated with leniency. The sentence on Private Carney should have been ten years' penal servitude, added to the fifty lashes. The second instance of the charge was for striking Surgeon Holton, and this occurred seven days after his misconduct of using abusive language, and after he had been under restraint; hence it was premeditated, and carried out in cool blood, not in a frenzy of passion. Discipline is not, and never will be, upheld by such inadequate punishments for great crimes.—Bengal Hurkara.

HINDOO FUNERAL CEREMONIES.—The following is a translation of an Oordoo letter from Puttealah, dated the 20th November, 1862:—"His Highness Maharaja Nurindhur Singh Bahadoor of Puttealah departed this life on Thursday, the 13th November. About one o'clock in the day-time, when the Maharaja was suffering the last agonies, 'purwanus' were ordered to be written and sent to the different places in the Puttealah territory to liberate seven hundred prisoners from the jails; and one hundred cows and two thousand rupees cash and quantities of sweetmeats and grain were given to the poor in charity. A short time after this the Maharaja breathed his last. It was about four when His Highness's body was removed from the palace. Almost all the chiefs, courtiers and the inhabitants of Puttealah, with tears in their eyes, accompanied the funeral; about two hundred pairs of shawls were thrown on the body of the Maharaja, and two hackery loads of sandal-wood, three maunds of ghee, and five maunds of cocoanuts were taken to the funeral pile. For three days every one struck work, and all the bazaars were closed. On the third day after the demise of the Maharaja the ashes were sent to the Ganges with great pomp, one elephant, four horses, one palanqueen, one nalkee, and one hundred pairs of shawls and some cash, which are to be given to the Brahmans, were sent with the ashes. All the citizens of Puttealah are lamenting the late Maharaja, who was a most kind and benevolent ruler. The people of Puttealah did not cook their bread for three days until the ashes of the Maharaja were sent to the Ganges. As for the public offices of the Maharaja they will remain closed until the seventeenth day."—Delhi Gazette.

MILITARY COMMANDS.—The delay in filling up the Peshawur divisional command, vacant by the departure of Sir Sydney Cotton for England, has arisen from the entire change in the arrangements which the Government, on the recommendation of the Commander-in-Chief, is about to make as regards the military command in that part of the empire, and along the frontier. We understand that in future there will be two divisional commands, instead of one on the North-West frontier, the Peshawur division and the Sind Sagur division; and that the general officers commanding those two divisions will each of them take upon himself also the command of, and responsibility for, a certain portion of the frontier. The Punjab Irregular Force, though it will in future be under the control of the Commander-in-Chief, will not, we understand, be removed from the frontier, except in case of pressing emergency; but will continue, as heretofore, to hold an important chain of posts which it has always occupied with a few trifling changes. General Showers, now commanding the Presidency division, is, we believe, still the favourite for the Peshawur division, if he will accept it; and there are now two other general officers for divisional command, to one of whom, in all probability, the Sind Sagur division will, if constituted, be assigned. We cannot understand the prolonged delay which has taken place in making these arrangements.—Englishman.

THE 5TH BENGAL CAVALRY, in progress to relieve the 9th B.C. at Julpigoree, were at Fyzabad on the 22nd, and were to continue their march by the Segowlie route to their destination, giving off, as we notified some time ago, a detachment of fifty sowars for service with the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal and the General officer commanding the presidency division.

REDUCTION OF TROOPS IN BURMAH.—We see by our Burmah papers that a reference to their administration report of last year discloses the fact that within that period the military forces in the country were reduced from 11,778 to 5,537. This reduction chiefly affected the native corps, for we find that whereas at the close of 1860 this corps gave a total of 9,409 men; in the following year they could show only 3,305, which force is still further to be reduced, since vacancies in the Sapper battalion will not be filled up, and the battalion will be replaced by a regiment from Madras, one-third less in number.

NAGODE, Dec. 28.—The Commander-in-chief is to be here on the 5th proximo, and leaves for Allahabad on the 7th. Captain Osborn is here, and remains until the departure of his Excellency, and then leaves this for his new appointment at Bhopal. The agency of Rewah has been broken up, and all the European officers have left.

ROORKEE, Jan. 3.—In cantonments we have not let this festive season pass by without a fair share of innocent amusement, but so far as the station is concerned, Christmas and its dear old associations have alike failed to penetrate the mantle of apathy in which it is enshrouded. I do not think that even the Commander-in-Chief himself could cause the Lamelibrandiate here to come out of their shells. Boxing day was ushered in with a rifle match, the competitors being non-commissioned officers; the officers of the regiment giving prizes more or less valuable to the victors. The band, who have so frequently catered for our amusement, gave a ball in the evening, which was numerous attended, was got up with their usual good taste, and went off with great clat. New Year's day was well kept up. A cricket match by the sergeants commenced proceedings. Space will not admit a detailed account of this most interesting match. I may, however, remark that Canteen Sergeant Boddy's fielding and Sergeant Conolly's batting elicited just applause from the numerous spectators. Soldiers' games in the afternoon wound up the festivities of New Year's day, of which, I trust, we all, and you, sir, may see many.

THE STEAMER "JASON."—It appears that there has been a very extensive loss of private property by the wreck of the screw-steamer Jason on the Madras coast; and we regret to hear that, amongst others, Lady Elgin has been a heavy loser, all her ladyship's personal effects, with the exception of the baggage requisite for a sea voyage, having perished in the wreck.

SIR HOPE GRANT.—A correspondent of the Institute Journal affirms that Sir Hope Grant will not meet his Excellency at Jubbulpore as was originally intended; he comes up to Lucknow instead, and expects to arrive there about the 20th prox. His military secretary, Major Bidolph, R.A., will accompany him.

SIR HUGH ROSE AND COLONEL CRAWLEY.—Several journals at home and in India are asking loudly for the recall of Sir Hugh Rose, on account of his remarks in confirming the sentence of the court-martial on Paymaster Smales. His Excellency has been decried as a one-sided partisan, defending Colonel Crawley in bullying his officers, maligning a dead sergeant-major, and casting discredit upon a body of gentlemen whose conduct has been free from blame, and whose only idiosyncrasy was their hatred of their commanding officer. Now, while we admit the difficulty of believing that a body of English gentlemen, forming the officers of so gallant a corps as the Inniskilling dragoons, can be altogether in the wrong, and one man, their commanding officer, be altogether in the right, yet be it remembered that Sir Hugh Rose in his remarks upon the state of the regiment made assertions as facts which had come to his knowledge, and until these assertions be disproved, abuse and sensation writing will be of no avail. It may be exciting amusement penning philippics against a Commander-in-Chief, for the larger the game the keener is the sportsman's relish, but neither the Government nor the Horse Guards are likely to act on the recommendations of leading articles. No doubt these may be very fierce, and exhibit his Excellency in such a light that his immediate recall must appear necessary to save the army from imminent disgrace: but, alas! attic salt without facts is salt without savour. The assertions made by Sir Hugh Rose could not have been the result of an innate capacity for fiction on his part, but must have arisen from the communications which have passed between him and Sir William Mansfield. The latter officer approved of the finding of the Court, and the Commander-in-Chief in India appears merely to have confirmed the conclusions to which the Commander-in-Chief at Bombay had evidently arrived. To say that Sir Hugh Rose had no right in his comments on a court martial to remark on matters not investigated by that court is not an honest way of stating a fact. Those matters affected most seriously the discipline of the regiment where they were stated to have occurred, and were indirect causes of the court martial under revision, and it was not only was fully in the power of Sir Hugh Rose to comment upon them, but he would have failed lamentably in his duty to the army of India in general, and to the Inniskilling Dragoons in particular, had he avoided doing so. The defence now set up, that they were not matters of fact, has yet to be substantiated, and until it be so the best course for those not immediately interested to adopt is to be patient. It must have pained the Commander-in-Chief to consider himself bound to write in such a manner of a regiment so renowned as the old Inniskillings, but, having done so, the burden of disproof lies with the regiment itself. It will rejoice the army at large if it be established that the reputation of the corps for discipline in quarters has been as unsullied as its fame for bravery in the field.—Indian Empire, Dec. 27.

FEMALE EDUCATION IN DELHI.—The strides that female education is making in Delhi is significant of a very remarkable change which has at last come over the native mind. In May last there was one solitary school with about twenty little girls at Dlubgurh. There are now six schools in the city, and five outside, with an aggregate attendance of no less than one hundred and sixty. The Deputy Commissioner has personally examined the little scholars, and distributed prizes of two and four anna pieces to the best writers and readers. Applications for more schools are anticipated. That all this has been the result of the vast personal influence of one man is a well-known fact, but still we would point to the radical moral change which must be at work, revolutionizing society. Had such not been secretly going on, the most earnest exhortation and persuasion might have passed off as idly as the wind. The delicate question of purda nushoon, or screening from the public gaze of young females, seems to have been nicely handled. For those scholars who have further to walk, a sort of long hooded van, well padded, holding about sixteen, has been constructed, which plies with the little girls backwards and forwards morning and evening. The various schools are so located as to be most accessible to the families of the attendants. Children of the most respectable families, as well as of the humble classes, freely intermix. Thus the introduction of a system of female education in Delhi may be deemed without cavil to have passed the dangerous experimental stage. Five months have elapsed, and the demand for provision of accommodation is steadily on the increase. Yet there are no pecuniary inducements about it, nor are there expensive endowments required. The cost estimated for educating one hundred and twenty girls during the year is about Rs. 224, or less than 1-8 per annum each. The Director of Public Instruction may well congratulate the Government of the Punjab on the practical social reform he has thus admirably inaugurated.—Institute Journal.

SUPPOSED CONFEDERATE PRIVATEER.—The whole of the floating rumours and circumstantial accounts relating to the Confederate privateer in the bay (name unknown, probably the Three Black Crows), resolve themselves into these simple facts:—The barque Selim, Captain Simpson, inward bound from Melbourne, saw, off Keeling's Island, near the Straits of Sunda, to the southward of the Equinoctial Line, a large black man-of-war steamer lying-to under three topsails, jib, and spanker (no steam up, but funnel shut up as a telescope). When she sighted the Selim she bore away for her under all canvas, and when sufficiently near to make out the English flag, rounded to again under small canvas, and showed what the captain of the Selim says has been described to him as, and which he had no doubt of being, the Confederate flag.

A LITTLE sharp practice was shown by one of the men of the 35th Regiment the other day, in camp. When the officers were at mess, he went to the tent of the officer of his company, and calling out to the bearer, told him his master wanted his marching uniform immediately, and sword. The man gave them, and the soldier went away and dressed himself. He then went to where the horses were picketed, and called out to the officer's squire to saddle his master's horse at once. The man did so, and brought it, when the soldier mounted and rode off.

FINANCIAL PROSPECTS OF INDIA.—There is a general expectation in the country, produced by the appointment of Sir Charles Trevelyan as Minister of Finance, that her Majesty's Government will do all that the people wish in the way of relieving them of the more obnoxious forms of taxation. We believe that the Government can do this, and that it will do it. What need of the income-tax in India, when she is wholly relieved of the heavy expenses of superfluous military forces kept up in England for India and in India for England, and when the home expenditure is reduced to just dimensions? These things are now merely matters of time. But we have said that Government did much during the past year to relieve both its own burdens and those of the people. The Friend of India, in a lengthened retrospect of the past year, thus speaks under the head of Finance:—"On 16th April, in a most elaborate and able speech, Mr. Laing laid before the Imperial Legislature the Budget of 1862-63. The public, expecting prosperity, but they were not prepared for so much. The previous year had left a clear surplus of £142,623. The revenue of 1862-63 was expected to show an increase of £885,110, and the expenditure a diminution of £400,960, giving a total surplus for the official year which expires next April of £1,428,693. And this was in spite of the fact that more had been paid for opium, and much more devoted to public works, than had been estimated in last Budget, while Government had not availed itself of the power to raise half-a-million by local taxes for local public works. This result had been achieved, and the most glowing anticipations of the new Budget were justified by the rigorous reduction of military expenditure, and the silent increase of revenue due to the growing prosperity of the country under a Government to which credit had been restored. This surplus of nearly a million and a-half Mr. Laing devoted to increased grants for education and public works; to reducing the import duties on cotton goods to 5, and on yarn to 3½ per cent., at a sacrifice of nearly half a million of customs revenue; and to abolishing the tax of 2 per cent. on all incomes below Rs. 500 a-year, at the cost of a quarter of a million sterling. More than this, Mr. Wilson's threatened Licence-tax, which was expected to yield at least half a million, had been abolished in anticipation of the Budget, after some of the money had been collected. Lord Canning had closed his Indian career by thus relieving five millions of our Indian subjects of an impost they feared. Lord Elgin inaugurated his administration by freeing two-thirds of the payers of Income-tax from an impost they detested. The political effect of this, though not easily estimated, was immense and it was a subject of congratulation that the empire could be so cheaply delivered from what threatened seriously to affect its peace. The general result of the Budget was that the revenue estimated at £42,971,200 and the expenditure at £179,814 less. Every month of the past year, as it has brought its records of cash balances due almost solely to increasing revenue and diminishing expenditure, and its sales of opium at figures far above Mr. Laing's modest estimate, shows that the year 1862-63 will end with a surplus ten times larger than was expected." The prospect for the future, then, is bright both as regards material and political prosperity. The present year, we trust, will witness the consummation of both. The British rule, we believe, will be at a greater premium in the estimation of the people of India at the close of this year than it was at a discount at the beginning of last. It is the goodwill of the people that constitute the real strength of the Government.

THE RESOURCES OF INDIA.—With the influx of English piece goods, the demand for these productions of Dacca looms necessarily ceased; but our object in alluding to the subject was simply to insist on this point, that if, notwithstanding the adoption of machines of the roughest and most uncouth description, native ingenuity can effect such marvels, why should not the same ingenuity supplemented by English machines and English science be turned to good account in the manufacture of articles in iron and brass, and render the Indian public independent of all the Thompsons and Arlingtons to whom we are compelled to go whenever we want a lamp or a score or two of hinges. And yet the articles which these and other firms furnish for our comfort are all manufactured by native workmen, who perform their several duties under European superintendence. If the same "appliances" be made use of by the English interloper, who is prepared to accept something less than two hundred per cent. on his goods, there is no reason why he should not draw to himself the patronage of the public. Furniture manufactured in Calcutta is highly prized in the Upper Provinces, and it is enough that an article is known to be "Calcutta-made" to ensure for it a speedy and remunerative sale. What is there to prevent the location of an establishment in this city, and in some central point in the North-west Provinces, which shall produce articles quite as good as any that Shearwood or Lazarus can "turn out"? Native ingenuity, backed by European superintendence, and the adoption of the means used in the last-named establishments for the purpose of imparting the necessary finish to the goods offered for sale, are all that are requisite. Again, we know that Lucknow can manufacture glassware equal to the coarser description which is produced in England. Why cannot English capital and energy take advantage of this fact, and by adopting better instruments and machines, the latest discoveries in this branch of manufacture, and patient careful supervision, supply the country at cheaper rates with those indispensable articles for which it now pays so ruinously? Look, again, at the carpets of Mizapore, which nearly equal those of Axminster in England. Will not capital, machinery, and our superior skill in and knowledge of chemistry, whereby we might improve the dye and make it permanent, bring those carpets to greater perfection, and make them altogether equal to those produced at home? There is no insuperable impediment to the attainment of this end; and as "matting" is but little known in the Upper Provinces, where "durees" and carpets are extensively used, the demand for superior articles of the latter class can be met by one prepared to fulfil the conditions which reason and moderation prescribe. The number of the Christian residents in the N.W.P. is rapidly multiplying, and as the demand for carpets must necessarily keep pace with such increase, the speculator who will be content with a moderate profit upon his labours need not entertain any fear of failure. There is yet another direction in which English capital and enterprise might profitably venture, and that is, the scientific preparation of medicines. It is notorious that the raw materials of many of the medicines in common use, and which are brought from England, are to be found in abundance in the bazaar. It is no new fact that India produces many valuable drugs; that many more are brought hither from the Eastern islands; and that with all of these native practitioners are familiar. It is in the clumsy and dangerous way in which they are prepared that the bar to their general reception by the community is to be found. It is for the English speculator, familiar with the subject, to remove this impediment, and secure for himself, at the same time, a good reward.—Hurkaru.

THE PUNJAB.—The court martial on Lieutenant L. D. A. Jackson, Royal Engineers, closed on the 23rd instant. The defence, prepared by Mr. Scoble, of the Bombay bar, was most able and effective, exposing all the weak points, the discrepancies, which were numerous, and urging all that possibly could be said in extenuation. It was proved convincingly by the medical evidence that, had the deceased been in good health at the time the flogging was administered, no great injury could possibly have followed, but unfortunately he was suffering from a diseased liver at the time, and consequently a fatal result ensued. The impression at Mooltan was that Lieutenant Jackson would be found guilty of manslaughter, and be sentenced to two years' imprisonment.—Lahore Chronicle, Dec. 27.

OUR HOME CRITICS.—The London Examiner tells us, concerning the Indian land tax, that "at present, out of a net revenue of near £40,000,000, it forms no more than from £16,000,000 to £17,500,000. Owing to its rapacious and exacting character it is comparative stationary, while other branches of revenue have rapidly increased, or new ones have been created." A fair specimen this, of the impressions under which so many of our home contemporaries have delivered themselves upon this question. We have already said quite enough about the "rapacious and exacting character" of the tax; suffice it to add, that the land revenue represents nearly £20,000,000 out of £39,000,000, instead of sixteen or seventeen out of forty.—Times of India.

CABOOL, Dec. 12.—The undermentioned intelligence has been received from the Ameer's camp:—"The sepoys and sowars in the Ameer's camp are building their stables and houses to pass the winter, and the Ameer is always busy looking after the siege. Three aged respectable Heerates as deputies from Sultan Ahmed Jan had arrived in the Ameer's camp, and had begged of the Ameer on Sultan Ahmed Jan's part to release Sirdar Jellal-ooddeen Khan. 'Tell Sultan Ahmed Jan, with my salaam,' replied the Ameer, 'that for his sake I will keep Jellal-ooddeen for three years in prison, after which he, I am sure, will forget all the treatment he has received in Persia. When Jellal-ooddeen is liberated he will only be allowed enough to supply his actual wants, and no more.' It is ascertained from the Heerat deputies that Sooltan Ahmed Jan had kept the Mushhed gate of Heerat open to receive supplies, &c., but since Sirdar Shere Allee Khan had ordered Kohistanees and Ghilzaies to be encamped before that gate the besieged are very much straitened, and cannot go out to get supplies. Dec. 13.—In consequence of the fall of snow there was no durbar to-day. Sirdar Mohamed Allee Khan was on the gate of his Dewan Khana when Mirza Ahd Khan handed over to him the following letter, received from Sirdar Mohamed Ufzul Khan, from Toorkistan:—"Since the arrival of the King of Bokhara in Hissar there has been confusion over almost all Toorkistan. People are inventing different stories; some said that the king was coming to Tashkurghan, while others gave out that he was going to pay a visit to the Muzar Shurreef (some famous tomb in Toorkistan). When such rumours were going on I was obliged to look after my frontier. I had scarcely begun to think of it when an ambassador with a welcome letter about Hissar and Kolaub arrived from the King of Bookhara, telling me that the King had left Hissar for Bookhara. The King has desired me in his letter to write to the Ameer to dismiss the Bookhara ambassadors as soon as possible. The King has sent me lots of valuable presents and has written to me very kindly. Sirdar Mohamed Allee Khan ordered a letter to be written to Mahomed Ufzul Khan, informing him that his letter had been forwarded to the Ameer, and that the Bookhara ambassadors, as communicated before, had left the Ameer's camp for Bookhara. Dec. 14.—Since twelve last night snow has commenced to fall, and had not ceased up to sunset. The cold is very severe now in Cabool. It is ascertained by the son of Sirdar Mohamed Oosman Khan that the Sirdar had taken upon himself to see matters settled between the Ameer and Sooltan Ahmed Jan, and that he, Oosman Khan, was to go to Herat as the Ameer's Deputy. The son of Oosman Khan says that he has received a letter from his father to that effect, and that very shortly the Ameer was to leave for Candahar. The above is merely from the son of the Sirdar; if confirmed by public letters it will be communicated."

DELHI, Jan. 4.—H.M.'s 21st Hussars were yesterday inspected by Brigadier-general Wheler, C.B., opposite their encampment in the old cantonments. The general, attended by a numerous staff, arrived on the ground at 8 A.M., and the proceedings commenced by the usual ride up and down the line, after which the regiment marched past at a walk, then at a trot, by threes, and wheeling round passed in the opposite direction at a gallop. They then formed line and went through the sword exercise. Few among the numerous spectators would have guessed the age and standing of the regiment whilst they were admiring the steadiness of man and beast, which was surprisingly marked, and must have given great satisfaction to the gallant cavalry brigadier who reviewed them. I have not heard General Wheler's opinion, but it must have been favourable. The 21st will resume their march to-morrow morning, and the general will return to Meerut to-day, I believe. The weather is cloudy and cool, rain is much required in the district, but at present there does not appear to be much likelihood of a fall.

OUTRAGE ON BRITISH OFFICERS.—Intelligence has reached us of a gross outrage having been perpetrated upon two British officers by Scindia's retainers. In 1857, when many loyal Chiefs and independent sovereigns boldly risked their thrones in the defence of European life, the gates of Scindia's palace were closed, while Englishmen and women and children were being massacred in the neighbouring cantonment. Still the British Government accepted his protestations of loyalty, and treated him as a faithful ally. Driven subsequently from his throne and capital, he found honourable reception in a British garrison, and by British bayonets under the leadership of the gallant Sir Hugh Rose he was re-seated on his throne. The British Government continued to lavish honours and favours upon this prince, yet we heard but a short time ago of his all but insulting the Viceroy in a public State durbar. This was put down to ignorance and want of behaviour, though oriental princes are not in general ignorant of etiquette. Still the Government continued to shower favour on him, and have only lately made over to him certain tract of territory in Central India, whereof the town and fort of Jhansi are part. A short time ago two British officers belonging to the artillery went to see the fort of Jhansi. Will it be believed they were seized by Scindia's men, pinioned and marched into cantonments as prisoners because there was an order of the Maharajah that no one should go inside the fort? And this at Jhansi! The event has caused no inconsiderable excitement. In 1862, at an interval of six years from the time when those events took place which have rendered this place, Jhansi, ever memorable as the scene of one of the foulest acts of treachery and bloodshed that ever stained the annals of any country, two British officers are seized by the retainers of the present ruler of the place, and marched in triumph as prisoners into a British cantonment. Is it not enough that a native chief should adopt the very significant measure of keeping British officers out of a fort but recently made over to him by the British Government, but are we to see our nation again disgraced, and that publicly in the face of all India, by officers being openly seized and treated as captive prisoners? Is this the return Scindia makes for the treatment he has received from our Government? Is this the sort of protection British officers are to receive in independent states? Is this the sort of exhibition that ought to be made to the people of Bundelkund, and the inhabitants of Jhansi in particular? How long was it, we wonder, before the news was circulated throughout every independent state in Central India and Rajpootana, that Scindia had prevented British officers from going inside the Jhansi fort, and had seized and publicly disgraced two of them for venturing there without his orders?—Delhi Gazette, Dec. 23.

HARD FROST.—The heaviest frost for ten or more years is said to have occurred in the Punjab districts bordering on the foot of the hills. On the 26th of December the thermometer stood, in some parts of the country, as far down as latitude 32 deg., at five degrees below freezing point. The continued absence of rain, usual about the end of the year, is much felt, and prices of cereals and gram are advancing, there being no stocks to fall back upon.

THE 23RD P.N.I. PIONEERS marched into Jullunder on the 30th December.

ROAD FROM TONSE-BRIDGE TO ALLAHABAD.—Orders have been given for the construction of a metalled road from the Tonse-bridge to Allahabad. The river is about eighteen miles from here, and it is anticipated that the line of rail to that river will be opened in about two months, by which time also, it is hoped, the road will be ready for the convenience of the dawk companies' carriages to bring the passengers from the rail into Allahabad.

SIR J. P. GRANT AND MR. E. H. LUSHINGTON.—We have been informed that a despatch has recently been received by the Government of Bengal from Sir J. P. Grant, late Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, expressing his regret in having omitted to record, at the time of his departure from India, his high appreciation of the able and eminent services of Mr. E. H. Lushington, Secretary to the Bengal Government, and of Lieut.-Colonel Beadle, Secretary to the said Government in the Public Works Department, and requesting his successor, Mr. Beadon, to put the same on record in the Bengal Office. A copy of the above despatch, we also learn, has been forwarded to the Government of India in the Home Department, and to the parties concerned.—Hurkaru, Dec. 27.

BAREILLY, Dec. 25.—"Our new church was opened to-day, every soul in the station attended, and our worthy pastor, the Rev. Mr. Cowie, gave us an excellent sermon well-suited to the occasion. The church is not quite completed, being still deficient in windows and flooring, but these will be all supplied during the next two months. It is truly a superb building, unequalled for size and tasteful design by any other church in the N.W.P."

HER MAJESTY'S 98TH are to leave Rawul Pindee, on the 1st January, and may be expected at Umballa on the 8th February.

MR. J. W. WYLLIE is likely to be appointed Post-Master General of the Punjab.

LIEUTENANT JACKSON'S CASE.—Europeans in India with limited incomes have certainly a large number of annoyances to contend with. Rendered irritable by exhaustion consequent on heat, and probably further debilitated by the effects of fever, or other disease, the Anglo-Saxon in this country very frequently acquires a more easily-provoked temperament than would have been natural to him had he remained at home. Of course there are stable and well-regulated minds that are proof against those peculiar causes of increased irritability which exist in India, either from excess of apathy or jollity. But the fact is as we have stated it as regards the great majority. We have no intention of excusing the displays of passion Europeans are so prone to give way to, but there are certainly periods when European equanimity is put to a very severe test, and this happens more often, perhaps, from the stupidity, assumed ignorance, or impertinence of servants, than from any other cause. The defence of Lieut. Jackson is now before the world, and from a perusal of it we have little doubt what the verdict will be. The charge of murder will fall to the ground, and the prisoner be acquitted of that serious crime. It appears that the servant Munnoo Khan was suspected of stealing his master's property, but that the theft could not be brought directly home to him. Lieutenant Jackson having no doubt of the guilt of the man, unwisely took the law into his own hands, and administered some fifty blows upon his back, having previously tied him to a tree. The blows were at first inflicted with a cane, and afterwards with switches cut from a neighbouring date tree. There would seem to be some discrepancy in the evidence as to how long the flogging was continued. The defence states that the servants continued flogging the deceased after Jackson had retired into the house and had told them to cease. It is impossible to believe that in inflicting the punishment Jackson had any intention of committing murder. The defence says justly, that "no man who contemplated serious consequences would have so courted publicity as to commit the crime in the sight and hearing of so many individuals. But," says Lieut. Jackson, "I contemplated no crime. I did not even anticipate any serious consequences, and the best proof of this, if proof be wanting, is in the order I gave to Bhodoo, to put Munnoo Khan's property outside my compound, that when he had had a sound thrashing he might take himself off, and trouble me no more." The line of conduct adopted by Jackson was reprehensible in a very high degree, but the supposition that he designed to murder the man is too violent to be entertained. And there seems to be little doubt that had the servant been in sound health, he would not have died from the chastisement he received. If it be true that Munnoo Khan, at the time he was flogged, was suffering under the disease known as Bright's affection of the kidneys, and if that disease had attained an advanced stage, the man's death at an early period was a probable occurrence. The proximate cause of death is stated to have been bronchitis, which is not at all an uncommon sequel to "Bright's disease." Every authority who has described the disease allows that the affection may progress to an irreclaimable extent, without even the person affected knowing that he has a mortal disease in his system. This would seem to have been the case with this unfortunate man, who, though apparently healthy, bore within him a deep-seated malady, which must sooner or later have terminated fatally. Under these circumstances the question for consideration is, how far the flogging should be held to have caused the death. The answer to this question must have important bearing on the sentence. The diseased state of Munnoo Khan was not known to his master, but the flogging was an unlawful act, and as it turned out, "dangerous to life." A flogging will be attended with danger in certain states of health, and therefore the medical opinion must be qualified. Taylor says the law in such cases appears to contemplate the direct, and not the future or possible, occurrence of danger. If the last view were adopted the most trivial laceration or puncture might be pronounced dangerous to life, since tetanus, or fatal erysipelas, has been an occasional consequence of very slight injuries. The immediate cause of the man's death was bronchitis, which Dr. Burnside says was brought on by external violence. But none of the other medical men who were examined had ever known bronchitis to result from flogging, or would expect it to do so. Dr. Burnside stands so far, therefore, alone in the belief that a flogging may be the exciting cause of bronchitis.—Time of India, Jan. 8.

MOVEMENT OF TROOPS.—A Battery 2nd Brigade R.A., formerly 1st Troop 1st Brigade H.A., will be at Futtehpore on the 3rd Jan., and Orai the 16th en route to Morar. The A Battery 11th Brigade were to leave Bareilly for Fyzabad on the 20th.

FYZABAD, Dec. 29.—H.M.'s 9th Regiment N.I., marched into cantonments on the morning of the 26th instant. They were met by the band of H.M.'s 107th Regiment, who played them in. The officers afterwards repaired by invitation to the mess of the 107th, where a sumptuous breakfast was laid out, and done ample justice to. H.M.'s 35th may be expected about the 15th January, when the gallant 107th return to Lucknow. Weather delightful, and sickness at a discount in this pretty little station.

H. M.'s 13TH LIGHT INFANTRY passed through Agra to the railway terminus, en route down country, on the 31st Dec.

PUNJAB APPOINTMENTS.—The following Punjab appointments are reported to us as about to be made or actually carried out. We some time since announced the first on the faith of a Lahore contributor:—Mr. F. A. Moore, to officiate temporarily as Postmaster-General of the Punjab and Sind, vice Mr. Reg. Saunders, proceeded on leave to Calcutta. Mr. E. A. Prinsep, C.S., to be Principal Settlement Officer, or Commissioner of Settlements for the Punjab, an office for which he is said to be peculiarly well fitted from previous experience. Major Blair Reid, just returned from furlough, to be Superintendent of the Hill State of Chumba. Major Bush, Deputy-Commissioner of Umballa, to proceed as "resident" to Kashmir during the season of 1863. Other changes must follow, of which we are promised early intelligence.—Delhi Gazette.

FALSE ACCUSATION.—It is one of the fundamental laws of journalism that the name of an informant is never given up. It is quite right it should be so, for otherwise we should lack information on all points. If anything could justify departure from this rule it is in cases where an editor of a journal has been deceived, and that with a malicious object. This is the case with us. We were informed the other day by a person whom we could not possibly suspect of sitting down to write a deliberate falsehood, that Mr. E. P. Moore had been imprisoned in the Simla gaol, on a discreditable charge connected with money transactions. Mr. Moore was accused of swindling by Major Goad, but acquitted of the charge by a jury, consisting of Colonel Colyear, Captain Penegree, Lieutenant Pogson, Mr. Wallace, and Mr. Graham. Captain Macmahon put him in gaol without an explanation, because, when under the protection of the Court as an insolvent, Mr. Moore left Simla without permission. Altogether the transaction is unintelligible to us, for if Mr. Moore, being a British born subject, could not have been imprisoned on such a charge, why and how could he be tried for it? Any how, it is clear that we were deceived, and have called on our informant for explanation; meantime, we take this opportunity of contradicting the statement.—Delhi Gazette.

EXPORTS (Calcutta, Jan. 4).—Produce Market.—Since our last the holidays have, of course, interfered with the ordinary course of business, but on the open days a fair amount of business was transacted.

IMPORTS (Calcutta, Jan. 4).—A good business at gradually advancing prices has been transacted. The improvement amounts to 4 to 6 annas on the wider class of Grey Shirtings, and 2 to 4 annas on 39 inch goods. Light fabrics and bleached goods participated in the improvement. The great bulk of the purchases is on native account.

TRAGIC OCCURRENCE.—The lines of H.M.'s 6th Inniskillings, at Mhow, have recently been the scene of a tragic occurrence. The facts, so far as we have been able to learn, are briefly these:—A young fellow named Sykes, until a short time since holding the appointment of mess sergeant, had, while in this position, formed an intimate acquaintance with the wife of a brother non-commissioned officer, with the knowledge and apparent approbation of her husband. Sykes, however, not long ago, lost his situation in consequence of being Rs. 1,000 to the bad in his accounts, and was tried, reduced, and imprisoned. On the termination of his imprisonment, Sykes proceeded to the quarters of his quondam friend, but a startling change had taken place in their feelings towards him, and he was treated with marked coldness. He accordingly left the house, got drunk, and was placed in the guard-room, from which, however, he succeeded in secretly effecting his escape. This was on Christmas night. Again he returned to the house, and finding the husband drunk, assaulted and beat the wife in a most brutal manner. Thence returning to the barrack-room, he took a carbine and one round of ammunition and once more bent his steps to the woman's quarters with the supposed intent of shooting her, but disappointed in his expectation of finding her, turned the weapon against himself; the ball penetrated his chest, and he fell a corpse on the threshold. An inquest assembled on the 26th inst., returned a verdict of "Felo-de-se," and the body was buried on the same day without military honours.—Deccan Herald, Jan. 2.

DEATH OF THE REV. M. H. JEFFERS.—No season, however joyous, is secure against the intrusion of death. The pages of this day's journal, which carry to our readers congratulation and wishes of joy, cannot escape being darkened by the black margin which tells of bereavement and sorrow. Many besides the readers of the Madras Times will hear with sincere regret the sad announcement which it is our painful duty to make, of the death of the Rev. M. H. Jeffers, B.A., principal proprietor, and for some time editor of this journal. Mr. Jeffers was a passenger on board Messrs. Green's ship The Lord Warden, that after a tedious voyage of 103 days, protracted by bad weather and adverse winds, anchored in our roads yesterday morning. He left Madras in January last, to seek in his native country the restoration of his health, which had been long in an enfeebled condition, but not finding the improvement he hoped for, and wishing to avoid the inclemency of an English winter, he re-embarked for Madras in September last. On the 13th of this month, within a very few days of the close of the voyage he breathed his last. In him the public have lost an earnest, able, and impartial journalist; one whose hearty indignation at injustice, oppression and wrong, was equalled only by his disinterested energy in exposing it; who with all his heart loved justice and hated iniquity. To those who have read this journal from its commencement no illustration will be thought necessary. The rev. gentleman whose career of usefulness has been cut short in the prime of life, for he was only in his thirty-fourth year, came out to Madras in September, 1855, as the minister of Christchurch, in the Mount road. In 1859 the complaint which proved fatal made its appearance, and he became incapable of performing clerical duty. He was obliged to dissolve his connection with the colonial Church Society, and at the same time to resign the offer of a chaplaincy on the Madras establishment which, on the recommendation of the late Bishop Dealtry, was made to him by Sir Charles Wood. Debarred by disease from the service of the Church, as one of her clergymen, in the later end of 1860, he connected himself with the press of Madras by becoming proprietor and editor of the Daily Times. His memory will long have a place in the hearts of a large circle of attached friends and warm admirers.—Madras Times, Dec. 26.

SIR HOPE GRANT.—KAMPTEE, Dec. 31.—The Commander-in-Chief arrived here last Sunday week, and, commencing with H.M.'s regiments, successively trotted out every corps and department for inspection, and every one will remember the visitation for some time to come. In the first place, H.M.'s "out-and-outers" had their conceit taken out of them considerably; and each successive corps, horse, foot, and dragoons, including the artillery, were weighed in the balance and found wanting. However, when the cocked hat is put aside and the harness thrown off, a better man does not step than Sir Hope Grant. He immediately became popular with the Pig-sticking Club, from the hard riding qualities and first-rate seat in the saddle that he displayed. He went out one day with the Hunt Club on his way to visit the projected sanatorium at the Myrtoor-hills, and must have ridden close upon thirty-five miles the first stage on the road, including the hunt. They did not have much sport. He has been entertained by the station, each regiment and department vying to show hospitality and welcome the chief. His good lady, who accompanies him, has, with her well-known activity and benevolence, instituted meetings of soldiers' wives to be taught sewing, &c., and the ladies of the regiment have been encouraged to continue these meetings. Lady Grant has instituted similar meetings for the above purpose in all the stations where H.M.'s regiments are posted. His Excellency, after returning from Myrtoor, goes on to Lucknow and Benares to meet Sir H. Rose.

FRENCH COOLY TRADE.—It is with real satisfaction that we learn by our Madras papers that the pleasant little "family compact" at Pondicherry for kidnapping her Majesty's liege subjects of India, and sending them to various French settlements, has at last been dissolved by no less a personage than the French Emperor himself. The Pondicherry Government, or rather Governor, had evidently resolved that emigration from India to the French colonies should only take place at Pondicherry. The reason assigned was, that the French shipping would thereby be considerably benefited, and that if, on the contrary, the emigrants were shipped from British ports, the British ships would monopolise all the advantages of the traffic. Notwithstanding all her progress, France is only now beginning to allow free-trade ideas to dawn on her benighted mind, and consequently this reason would doubtless have been a sufficient answer to any inquiries made on the subject by the French Colonial Minister. The reason assigned by the Pondicherry Government was in itself a gross violation of the spirit of the treaty by which France is permitted to recruit emigrants in India to supply the deficient labour market of her colonies. Regard for French shipping, however, was found, on inquiry, to dwindle down into regard for the Governor of Pondicherry's son-in-law. The Madras press first took the matter up, and the Chamber of Commerce at the Presidency protested promptly and energetically against the measure that interfered with free-trade in the shipping, and practically denied us the small compensation for the loss that India sustains by the treaty, of carrying away some of our own coolies from our own territory to enrich our neighbours. Pondicherry certainly is a long way from Paris, and Governor D'Urbraye turned a deaf ear to our demands, doubtless thinking that the freedom and health of some thousands of her Majesty's subjects are small things to stand in the way of the enrichment of his estimable relative. An English Chamber of Commerce was, however, not to be beaten thus, nor English journals silenced. Some of our merchants made representations to the French Government, and the minister loyally annulled the decree issued by the Pondicherry Government regarding the emigration. It is with extreme pleasure that we receive this new and prompt assurance of the continuation of the entente cordiale. Certainly, the late proceedings of M. D'Urbraye were discreditable to France and irritating to England. The French minister's interference will, however, we hope, have the effect of inducing his deputy at Pondicherry to give up his discreditable speculations and look after the people committed to his charge. The Bourbon Government had often expressed a wish to be allowed to obtain coolies from Madras; and we are informed that when the decision of the French Government was ascertained, orders were sent from Bourbon to the Madras Presidency to recruit five thousand coolies.—Englishman, Dec. 17.

BOMBAY.

ALLEGED CAPTURE OF FEROZE SHAH.

At Patan the political authorities, Major Arthur and Captain Fenwick, captured on the 2nd Jan. a Mohammedan who is said to be Feroze Shah. He was pointed out by a sepoy of a native infantry regiment. This man tells a strange story. He has been absent from his regiment for a year without leave, his family, however, remaining behind. He says he has been all this time occupied in dogging the disguised Shahzade, and has taken the first opportunity of handing the rebel leader over to the British power. It is perhaps not worth while to question the accuracy of this tale; though, as the man is a Mussulman himself, it is probable that he did not originally go in quest of Feroze Shah, but that, having begun by a bond fide desertion, he afterwards changed his mind when he saw that he could make money by betraying the fugitive. The supposed Feroze Shah was taken early in the morning. Major Arthur and Captain Fenwick pretended to be going out shooting, and, as they passed through the city with guns and beaters, suddenly entered the house which the sepoy pointed out. A Mohammedan who stood at the door was greatly alarmed. They pushed past him and found a man in bed, whom they seized. The sepoy swore he was Feroze Shah. The wretched creature shook with deadly terror, and confessed that he was a relation, a nephew, of the King of Delhi. He was immediately secured and sent off to Deesa, where he remains in charge of a European guard, and the orders of Government are now awaited. The Gaikwar and his Minister, who were at Deesa when the prisoner was brought in, are said to be delighted at the capture, and certainly the Mahrattas owe no love to the house of Timour. It is not a little curious that the last chief of that house who refused to pay allegiance to the British Government should have been taken at a place in the heart of India so soon after the death of the ex-King of Delhi. Though a rebel and fugitive from justice, and though knowing well that he had no mercy to look for if he fell into our hands, he seems to have been resolved to ascertain what was the state of the popular feeling towards himself and his cause, and with this view to have ventured into the midst of the English dominions where he might still have remained safe in exile. His betrayal by a man of his own caste and creed, following as it does so closely on the failure of the Mahratta conspiracy in the Deccan and the capture of other noted rebels, proves that there is at present not the slightest disposition on the part of the people of India to expose their lives and property to destruction by giving encouragement to the few reckless spirits who wish to begin another insurrection. Feroze Shah was one of the most active and pertinacious of our enemies in 1857-58. He was at Delhi, with the Gwalior Contingent at Cawnpore, with Tantia Topce in his flying marches through Central India, and, during the four years he has been in exile, his name has frequently appeared in connection with intrigues and conspiracies against the British power in India. The fate which has already overtaken nearly all his comrades in rebellion now marks him as its latest victim; and, when he has suffered the just doom of treachery and murder, there is left but one name more, that of Nana Sahib, to add to the list, ere the tale of retribution for the massacres of 1857 is finally closed.—Bombay Saturday Review, Jan. 10.

BOMBAY MERCANTILE MORALITY.

Considering that the good folks of Bombay have always been disposed to sneer at the morality of Calcutta merchants and traders, we may be excused if we laugh at the way in which the tables have now been turned upon some members of their own community. The tampering with the officials of the telegraphic department, the cutting of the wires, &c., were all ascribed to, and accepted as the acts of a certain class of opium dealers in the bazaar. The charge substantiated against certain natives, of getting advances under false pretences from the banks upon shipments of silks and other merchandise, was looked upon also as an exceptional case. The exposures and scandal which originated in the lawsuits between the promoter and the shareholders of the Throstle Mill Cotton Company and the Bombay Steam Navigation Company, which were not confined to Natives only, rather shook our faith in the asserted superiority of the commercial morality of Bombay over the other Presidency cities. But we must confess that we have, since the Goculdass Tezpal scandal, almost ceased to believe in it. The person named, who was a leading Bombay merchant and a member of the Council of the University, was accused by the agents of a local Steam Navigation Company of giving false statements of the amount of bullion contained in the packages which he was accustomed to ship by their steamers, thereby saving a considerable portion of the per centage he should have paid for its transmission; of which charge he appears to have pleaded guilty, as it was compromised by his paying a large sum to the Lancashire Relief Fund as conscience money. This conduct was denounced, we think very properly, by most of the Bombay journals, though we are sorry to see that he found one apologist, upon the ground, as far as we can understand, that he only did what other merchants, both Native and European, were in the habit of doing. This charge has been denied officially by the Committee of the Chamber of Commerce, who say that they do not believe it to be a common practice amongst merchants and others shipping specie, to make false declarations of value to evade payment of the per centage charged upon freight; further stating that the commission of such an act would, in addition to the usual legal penalties, entail upon the offender instant expulsion from all respectable society. A Native gentleman, however, who, the Bombay Gazette says, is under the impression that such a practice does exist, has placed one thousand rupees in the hands of the editor of that journal to bring the point in dispute to a test, and upon the result stakes his one thousand rupees, to be handed over to the Lancashire Relief Fund in case of his failure to make good this impression. It is proposed to let the Committee of the Chamber of Commerce draw at their pleasure the names of fifteen English houses who may be the consignees of specie and the addresses of registered packets relating to the same by the incoming English mail steamer; let the contents of those shipments and packets be examined as to the value of the specie declared in the bills of lading and on the face of the packets respectively, and if these correspond, if there be no fraud akin to that laid to the charge of Mr. Goculdass Tezpal, the party whom the Gazette calls the challenger of the Chamber of Commerce agrees to forfeit the money to the Lancashire Fund. It is distinctly stated that Goculdass is not the challenger. The Chamber can hardly refuse to take up this challenge, of the result of which we can have little doubt. We do not believe that European merchants or bankers would lend themselves to such discreditable frauds, and we hope there are very few Natives who would do so. But, after the late exposures, we would not feel too sure of it. We have heard that not long since sovereigns were shipped to a Presidency City in boxes containing also silver bars and, we believe, five-franc pieces; though the bills of lading had been signed for silver only. This was, however, so sharply resented by the consignee that the trick has never been repeated. It is only just to say that the shippers were French merchants. We do not believe, however, that any merchant in Calcutta, Bombay, or Madras would transact such business or continue relations with any one who did so; we have far too high an opinion of our merchants and bankers in India for that. But we have no fear as to the result of the Bombay wager if it has been accepted.—Englishman.

BANK OF BOMBAY.—A dividend for the half-year ending Dec. 31st of Rs. 55 per share, being at the rate of 11 per cent. per annum, clear of Income-tax, on the capital stock of the bank, has been declared.

DEATH OF DR. GRIERSON.—We deeply regret to announce the death of David Grierson, M.D., Deputy-Inspector-General of Hospitals, Poona Division. He died at his residence in Poona on Jan. 6th, surrounded by all the members of his family in this country. The cause of his death was aneurism of the heart, and his last sufferings, in which Christian patience and resignation had their perfect work, were very severe. Dr. Grierson saw long and arduous service in his profession, and few ever equalled him in the fidelity with which he performed it. He was a man of very remarkable consistency in his private and public walk, strictly conscientious in every act of his life, and of extraordinary strength and force of character. He possessed a mind of a high order, which has been carefully disciplined by intense thinking and reasoning; a very sound judgment, which clearly discerned and firmly held fast the right and the true; and a heart of the warmest affections and tenderest sympathies. A profound student, a careful observer, and a skilful practitioner, he stood in the highest rank of his profession. He was a most exemplary Christian: the light which was in him was never dimmed, much less was it ever darkness, but it shone steadily, brightly, to the great benefit of all who were about him and to the glory of God. We need not speak of the irreparable loss which his bereaved family have sustained; in his death society, the State, the Church have sustained a very severe loss. But to him, to die was indeed gain.

MELANCHOLY ACCIDENT.—A most melancholy accident, involving the death of an amiable young lady, occurred last Sunday evening. Miss Bolton was, it appears, returning with a party of friends from dining out, and while passing along the McLeod road the horses shied and took fright. The gentlemen who was accompanying them (there were three ladies in the carriage) got out to assist the coachman, by going to the horses heads, and in doing so tripped and fell. This alarmed Miss Bolton and one of her companions, who conceiving there was more danger than really existed, immediately threw themselves out of the carriage and fell to the ground. Neither of the ladies appear to have sustained any serious external injury, but Miss Bolton was taken up insensible and died in three or four hours. The immediate cause of her death, we believe, is attributed to disease of the heart, aggravated by the shock she had sustained. The other lady is convalescent. This unfortunate event has cast a considerable gloom over the station; the deceased lady being connected with several families at present residing in Kurrachee, and universally esteemed.—Sindian, Dec. 31.

SIR WILLIAM MANSFIELD AND HIS HIGHNESS KHUNDOO RAO.—AHMEDABAD, Jan. 6.—The last news respecting the tour of Sir W. Mansfield is that on the 31st ult. he had reached Puttun, thirty miles out of his way to Deesa, whither he had proceeded to meet his Highness Khundoo Rao, Guicowar of Baroda. A Durbar was held by the Guicowar for the reception of the chief, his staff, and the political on the 1st instant, and after it was over they were entertained at a sumptuous feast, for the preparation of which the services of the chief's cuisine were called into requisition. The whole affair was grand, and passed off to universal satisfaction. The tumasha was scarcely over, however, when off started Major Arthur, the Political Superintendent of Pahlapore, into the city, and seized a Bengalee-looking fellow, a Mussulman, apparently aged about thirty years, who was described by his "peacher" (a sepoy of a Bengal Native Regiment, now on furlough), from a conversation he had heard in the masjid at prayer time, as a grandson of Bahdur Shah, of Delhi. When captured he was found residing with a weaver, and the only account he could give of himself was that he had undertaken a pilgrimage from the Bengal provinces to a sacred shrine here (rather a long business, as he is known to have been in the place for eight or nine months), and that four companions in his pious journey who accompanied him to Puttun, are gone he knows not where. The natives have put him down as the veritable Ferozshah, but parties who have seen a photograph of the latter personage hold that there is no resemblance in the prisoner. However, the authorities seem to be of opinion that he is a "man of note," and have packed him off to Deesa under charge of a strong escort of the 1st Lancers, furnished from the chief's camp. The prisoner appeared terror-stricken on being captured. The chief moved on towards Deesa on the 3rd. He is, I believe, to make a stay there of a couple or three days, then move on to Aboo and Nusseerabad.

Retirement of Major-general Sir Sydney Cotton.

Head-Quarters, Camp Morar, Gwalior, Dec. 1.—The C. in C. in India has great pleasure in recording in this general order his high sense of the valuable services performed by Major-general Sir Sydney Cotton, K.C.B., who, now at the termination of his period of service, vacates his command of the Peshawur Division.

This distinguished general officer's service is of more than half a century, a great part of which, some forty years, has been passed in India.

H.E., and the army under his command, can never forget the excellent service which Sir S. Cotton performed during the eventful period of the mutinies.

There can be no doubt that the calm decision with which Sir Sydney Cotton met disaffection and controlled disorder within his command, and his appreciation of the state of affairs at that period, enabled, in a great measure, the Punjab Government to furnish the reinforcements which marched to Delhi, and contributed so essentially to the fall of that most important stronghold.

The best wishes of Sir Hugh Rose for his welfare attend Sir Sydney Cotton on his return to England.

DUTIES OF INSPECTORS OF ARTILLERY.

Adj. Gen.'s Office, Poona, Dec. 30.—No. 1,234.—The following orders respecting the duties of the inspector of artillery are issued for information, with reference to G.O. No. 510, of Sept. 10 last, and in accordance with the instructions of the C. in C. in India on the subject:—

I. The inspector of artillery will reside where he may wish, and will correspond with the assist. adjt. gen. of royal artillery on all subjects connected with his duties, and for submission to H.E. the C. in C.

II. He will make an annual inspection of every battery of royal artillery serving in the presidency, the head quarters of brigades, all works of defence manned by artillery men, and any portions of royal artillery batteries detached at stations away from their head quarters, as also all divisional arsenals, and he must be prepared at any season of the year to inspect any battery should occasion require it.

III. The brigade major will accompany the inspector on all occasions.

IV. The inspector will enter into communication with officers commanding the divisions of the army, in order that his inspections shall not follow or precede the half-yearly inspections of these officers too closely, in order to provide for the second half-yearly professional inspection of brigades and batteries of royal artillery, the inspector of artillery will deputise the officers commanding royal artillery in the several divisions of the army to perform that duty; care, however, must be taken that an interval of six months intervene between the half-yearly professional inspections.

The inspection reports of the officers commanding artillery in divisions will be sent for the information of the inspector through his brigade major, and for ultimate despatch to head quarters.

V. The inspector will exercise his own discretion as to the order in which he visits the several stations; he will be accompanied through the several army divisions by officers commanding royal artillery in those divisions.

VI. The usual regimental inspection reports (W. O. Form O 379), accompanied by the authorised parade states (W. O. Form O 380), will be sent in, in duplicate, as soon as possible after completing the inspection of each brigade or battery, to the assistant adjutant general of royal artillery at head quarters, for the information of H.E. the C. in C., and for transmission to the Horse Guards; these will be accompanied by a supplementary state, showing the state of efficiency of the native establishments (a form of which for guidance will be furnished to the inspector).

VII. When batteries of the same brigade are quartered at one station, or when a battery is quartered at the same station with the head quarters of its brigade, one form of report will suffice for both.

VIII. The general officers comdg. divisions will be informed by the inspector of the date he proposes to visit their districts, and they are requested to afford him every facility for carrying out his inspections.

IX. The directions laid down in page 404 of the Queen's Regulations for the guidance of general officers in making out their confidential reports will be found applicable to the inspector in framing his reports.

Official Papers.

THE WAR IN CHINA.

British Consulate, Shanghai, Nov. 19.

Sir,—I have the honour to inform you that a large force of rebels left Soochow, Hangchow, and Hoochow, headed by the Ting Wang, Mu Wang, and Ha Wang, for the purpose of attempting the recapture of Kah-ding and Tsingpo, and take, if possible, Sung Keong, Shanghai, and Paushun. They were to have assembled at Na-ziang, and thence marched in three separate divisions on the above-named enterprise. Information being received that a large portion of this force had already reached Wangdo, between Tsingpo and Kah-ding, the Governor of the Province marched against them from this city in person, and Colonel Burgovine, with a force of some 1,500 disciplined Chinese, simultaneously left Sung Keong for Tsingpo. Both parties fell in with the rebel force on the 16th inst., and, after a hard fight of some hours, the main body of rebels were dislodged from their position in a strong stockade by Colonel Burgovine's artillery, and the whole force was utterly routed with immense loss. The Ting Wang was drowned, the Mu Wang badly wounded, and an extraordinary number of chiefs killed and taken prisoners, the rebels having incautiously trusted to a floating bridge, which gave way at the first rush for escape. What with killed, prisoners, and deserters (chiefly the last), ten thousand only are said to have got away, and the Chinese authorities express their confidence that this victory will have the effect of keeping the thirty miles round Shanghai free from rebels for some time to come. Colonel Burgovine's men are said to have behaved extremely well, and to have shown great confidence in their officers. Their loss was trifling.—I have, &c.

RETIRING ANNUITIES.—CIVIL SERVICE.

Extract from the Proceedings of the Government of India in the Financial Department, under date the 2nd January, 1863.

Financial Department.—Read a despatch from the Right hon. the Secretary of State, No. 193, dated the 25th Nov., 1862.

Resolution 1.—H.E. the Gov. gen. in Council is pleased to resolve that the following extract from the despatch mentioned above be published for general information:—

"The memorials from the covenanted civil servants of the several Governments in India on the subject of their retiring annuities, and of the pensions of their widows and orphans, together with your financial letter, dated the 7th March, 1862, No. 40, the financial letter from Madras, dated the 8th Feb., 1862, No. 2, the public letter from Bombay, dated the 12th April, 1862, No. 13, and the several minutes of members of the respective Governments in India in reference thereto, have been considered by me in Council.

"It does not appear to be necessary to give a detailed reply to the observations of your Government, or to the requests contained in the several memorials, as the result of the consideration by her Majesty's Government of those observations and memorials will be apparent from the decision which I have now to communicate.

"In regard to the period of service which is in future to be required as a qualification for an annuity, her Majesty's Government see no reason for altering the period of twenty-five years' service and twenty-two years' residence (including one year's sick leave if such has been as at present), but they cannot allow any future special leave of absence from India on private affairs to count as residence.

"No sufficient ground appears to have been assigned for increasing or altering the amount of the full annuity, which therefore must remain at £1,000, or of the amount of the percentage of deduction from salaries which will continue at four per cent., the amount of subscriptions to accumulate, as at present, at six per cent. interest.

"Her Majesty's Government are of opinion that there is ground for making some alteration in the terms on which annuities are granted, and they have decided that a civil servant who has completed the prescribed period of service and residence shall be granted by Government an annuity of £600; and that he shall have the option of taking in addition an annuity of the amount not exceeding £400; which his accumulated subscriptions with interest will purchase according to the Table now in force, or of adding to his subscriptions such a sum as will purchase an annuity of any amount which, added to the £600 granted by Government, will not exceed the full annuity of £1,000. They have also decided that annuities, without limitation as to number, may be granted on application, at any time, to covenanted civil servants who have completed the prescribed periods of service and residence, and whose resignations of the service have been accepted, and that those civil servants who have obtained annuities since the memorials were sent in, be admitted from this date to the benefit of the arrangement now sanctioned.

"It must be clearly understood that in the event of the death of a subscriber his accumulated subscriptions will lapse, and that no refund of subscriptions can, under any circumstances, be allowed.

"Her Majesty's Government are also disposed to make some provision for covenanted civil servants who, having devoted a portion of their lives and energies, and especially those years during which men qualified for a profession, to the service of Government, are deprived of the fruits of their labour by sickness which may compel them to resign the service before they have become entitled to annuity. In any such cases, when clearly proved by a medical certificate, the following pensions may be granted:—

If under five years' service a grant of £500.
Of five years' service and under ten an annuity of £150.

Of ten years' service and under fifteen an annuity of £250.

Of fifteen years' service and under twenty an annuity of £350.

Of twenty years' service and under twenty-five an annuity of £450.

"Her Majesty's Government are willing to sanction the payment of all the annuities quarterly and to the date of decease with the same option as to payment in India or England as at present."

2. His Excellency in Council is also pleased to direct the publication of the following paragraphs of the same despatch containing orders regarding the claim to assistance from the State preferred by the Bengal Civil Fund, the Madras Civil Fund (Charity Branch), and the Bombay Civil Fund (Provident Branch):—

"Her Majesty's Government have no intention of withdrawing the aid which has been hitherto granted, and they see no reason for increasing it. If the subscribers prefer it there would apparently be no objection to granting, in lieu of the present indirect aids, an annual sum equal to the average of the donations during the past five years, the future interest on the balance of the funds being in that case fixed at five per cent., and the remittance of the sums required by the funds in England being made at the same rate of exchange as that fixed annually for the adjustment of transactions with the British Exchequer.

"These changes may severally be brought into immediate operation, and a copy of this despatch will be forwarded to the Governments of Madras and Bombay, respectively, for the information and guidance of those Governments."

Under-Secy. to the Govt. of India.

TOWERS OF SILENCE.—A letter in the Times recently described a graveyard at Naples; a companion picture may be taken from a late number of the Bombay Saturday Review, from which the following statement is extracted:—"There exists in Bombay, on one of the fairest spots of Malabar-hill, a wide extent of ground, allotted to one of the vilest purposes which it ever entered into the heart of man to conceive. Here we have in modern times the vulture preying upon the dead body, as in heathen mythology the bird is reported to have done on the living! The 'Towers of Silence' are immense structures of varied diameter, raised twenty, thirty, or more feet from the ground, in the centre of which is a well, covered by an iron network, frame, or grating. On the latter are placed the corpses of the Parsee population, and before the mourning relatives have left the grounds hundreds of carrion birds, of voracious vultures and hungry crows, are quarrelling, fighting, clawing, like so many ornithological devils, at the specimen of humanity exposed to their ravages. The delicate Parsee female, the portly merchant, the withered sexagenarian, are all thus disposed of, and we are credibly informed that two hours after the deposition of any body in the 'Towers of Silence,' bones alone are to be found, which are eventually thrown down into the well enclosed in the tower. At the same time the loathsome carrion birds, with their bald heads and hideous claws, arrange themselves in rows on the summit of the towers, bloated and surfeited from their ghoul-like feast, secure in the knowledge that, by waiting where they are, a repetition of the festival will take place to-morrow! But the blood, bones, and fluids of the body must escape the voracity of the carnivorous birds, and, gravitating downwards within the tower, there undergo the inevitable process of decomposition, rising thence in pestiferous gases, which are only less hurtful than the miasma of the graveyards, simply because the altitude of Malabar-hill allows the free breezes of the ocean to sweep them off into infinite space. We are, however, credibly informed that neighbouring residents are not unfrequently annoyed by the 'Towers of Silence,' and this not only by pestiferous effluvia, but even in a more demonstrable manner. Thus, we have heard it rumoured that it occasionally happens that feathered bipeds may be seen pursuing one another, and quarrelling over pieces of the human form divine! Nay, more; tales of our intrusive friends the crows hopping into verandahs with digits in their beaks have before now been related. The Parsees, who owe not only their wealth but their very location to the British, must not be longer suffered to carry on such a nuisance in the fairest part of Bombay. They, equally with all sects, must remove their 'Towers of Silence' without the island, and, having been made to take this step in advance, it may reasonably be expected with a race so 'Europeanised' that they will eventually hit upon some less loathsome method for disposal of their dead."

POPULATION OF MADRAS AND BOMBAY.—The total population of Madras is now estimated at 450,000, instead of 720,000, as was formerly the computation; and we find the probable approximate number of inhabitants in Bombay to be 571,668. We confess, however, to a belief that this number is very much below the mark.—Times of India.

HISTORICAL REMAINS AROUND DELHI.—The Deputy Commissioner, with his Assistant Commissioner, Mr. Saunders, and Dr. De Kantzow, are completing a descriptive account of the historical remains around Delhi. Proposals for the organised conservation of old buildings are also being prepared.

DR. HARRIS, on board the Australian at Kidderpore, missed his footing in going below to look after some convicts leaving for the Andamans in his charge, and falling to the bottom of the hold was so severely injured that he died before he reached the hospital.

PUNJAB INDIGO COMPANY.—Mr. Cosserat, the manager of the new "Punjab Indigo Company" (started in this district), having joined from Tirhoot, operations will be commenced upon immediately. Don't you think the Punjab Government are bound to promote the undertaking, by authorising the civil officers to render all the assistance in their power towards securing an allotment of land, &c. ? Should it be otherwise, what possible inducement can there be for capitalists to settle in India, where there is so much difficulty and trouble to be encountered in completing very trivial matters, let alone schemes of magnitude.

CANTEEN.—A scheme has been adopted, I believe, in the 95th regiment to reform the canteen, by placing it out of the power of the canteen sergeants to make any profit out of it. The sergeant-major is entrusted with the whole responsibility, and the canteen sergeants are to receive a handsome allowance in lieu of their former profits. The canteen fund is the richer by Rs. 100 in one month.

GOVERNMENT OF THE NORTH-WESTERN PROVINCES.

It is expected that before March next the Honourable Mr. Edmonstone will resign the office of Lieutenant-governor of the North-Western Provinces. He will then bend his way hitherward to enjoy in domestic leisure in his native land the honours and rewards of long and distinguished service abroad. All sorts of persons have been mentioned as the possible or probable successor of Mr. Edmonstone. Some speculators have fixed upon Mr. Wingfield, and have added that his appointment will emanate directly from Sir Charles Wood, without any previous communication with the Governor-general. Others talk of Sir R. Montgomery, Colonel Durand, and Mr. Muir. The latter is well known to be not only a distinguished revenue administrator, but an excellent Oriental scholar, deeply interested in the progress of native education. He has acquired some European reputation, too, by his "Life of Mahomet." Perhaps, of all the candidates yet mentioned, though all of them are men of mark and likelihood, Mr. Muir has the best chance of success.

THE GODAVERY.

It was proposed, we believe, a few years ago, to expend about a million of pounds sterling on certain improvements upon the river Godavery, and Captain Haig drew up a plan for overcoming the barriers of rock in its channel by lateral canals with locks. The great mutiny stopped this work as it stopped many others. Captain Haig, some years afterwards, revived the idea, and the authorities all seemed disposed to back him. But there has been a growing mistrust in the public mind as to the feasibility of the scheme; and even Captain Haig himself, and, still more, his immediate official superior, Colonel Ouchterlony, have since taken a despondent view of the matter, and the commercial communities of Manchester and London, who looked for great facilities in the transport of cotton by the improved river, have begun to resign their expectations. Colonel Ouchterlony even congratulated himself that the plan had not been carried out, for, in that case, he might have had to answer for "a terrible failure, involving the State exchequer in a labyrinth of operations, each stage vying with the other in magnitude of outlay, from which there would have been no retreat but by sacrifices of vast extent." Sir Charles Wood, however, it is said, is still disposed to carry on the work, and Colonel Ouchterlony is directed to give Captain Haig the benefit of his counsel and encouragement, and strengthen the hands of that officer, whose energy and perseverance in contending against difficulties the Government cannot but appreciate." If this be the case, Sir Charles Wood and his Council have, perhaps, advice and information upon the subject that are yet a secret to the public; for at present the general opinion seems greatly opposed to a vast expenditure on a doubtful project when there are so many other great public works of greater promise that demand the immediate attention of the State.

DR. DUFF AND EDUCATION IN INDIA.

WE have given, amongst our selections in another column, a report of the speech of the Hon. Sir R. Napier, at the thirty-second annual examination and prize distribution of the Calcutta Free Church Institution. This is one of the oldest and best of the educational institutions of Calcutta, intended exclusively for the instruction of natives of all castes and ranks. It owes its origin and success to Dr. Alexander Duff, who first went out to India as a missionary in the year 1829, when a voyage from Portsmouth to Calcutta was no trifling undertaking. The passage in his case extended to nearly eight months, during which he had to exhibit his patience and fortitude under no ordinary trials. He was shipwrecked off the Cape of Good Hope, and saved nothing but his life. He then encountered an awful tempest off the Mauritius, in which his vessel very nearly foundered, but was reserved to be violently cast a-shore in a dreadful hurricane at the mouth of the Ganges. This was not, apparently, a very auspicious introduction to his Indian career; but a dark and blustering morning is not always succeeded by corresponding weather throughout the day, and Dr. Duff has, perhaps, enjoyed life during his more than thirty years' residence in India as thoroughly as if he had passed it in his native land. India is no exile to him. It is his adopted country, and he loves its people. He loves, too, his hard work in their favour. "The labour we delight in physics pain." He has, on account of his native friends, and the cause of education in India, refused all offers of most honourable Church preferment in his own country.

Dr. Duff's educational institution was on a large and most effective scale long before the Government of India took any active part in the education of the natives; and though in some respects the present Presidency College, and a few other State schools in India, have many advantages over it, and are, upon the whole, more complete, and are better provided with accomplished professional instructors, and have more numerous scholarships and other encouragements to students, the Calcutta Free Church Institution still maintains its original reputation as a practically useful school. What strikes us as by far the most remarkable feature of Dr. Duff's institution is its unconcealed, or rather boldly avowed, connection of missionary purposes with the diffusion of secular knowledge. While the Government most stringently forbids the use of the Bible as a class book in its own institutions, and will permit none of its teachers to utter a syllable about Christianity and the Bible, Dr. Duff has morning and evening Christian prayers in his school-rooms, and makes the Christian Scriptures a class book for Hindu students; and yet finds no difficulty in obtaining an average muster of about fifteen hundred pupils and as many Hindu under-teachers as he requires. What is still more singular and significant is the fact that high Hindu noblemen "assist" at his public examinations in company with Christian magnates. On the last occasion Rajah Doo Narain Sing, Rajah Kalikrisna Bahadar, and Rajah Narindah Khrisna Bahadar sat side by side with the Hon. Mr. Erskine, the Hon. Mr. Ellis, and the Hon. Sir R. Napier, to witness and applaud the development of the native mind under the instructions of an eminent and most zealous Christian missionary. Yet some of the students exhibited their advance in Christian theology. One of them gave an "exposition of Cor. xxv.," and another presented "an Essay on Brahminism," which no doubt was anything but complimentary to that religion. But the students are not all converts. Very far from it. Comparatively speaking, there are very few converts indeed, even in this great missionary school, and, therefore, it is the more remarkable that the introduction of the Christian Scriptures to the students should prove so little objectionable. There is but one way to account for this striking fact—the children of poor Hindoos are charged nothing for their education here. It is wholly gratuitous. This is a great attraction certainly, for no people in the world are more willing to save their money than the natives of Bengal of all ranks, rich or poor. Many of the native parents, no doubt, are under the impression that the effect of Christian instruction at school can be wholly counteracted by Hindoo instruction at home; and aware that a knowledge of the English language is bread and butter, or rather curry and rice to their sons, and often leads to high Government employ and great social distinction; they are willing to run what they regard as a comparatively slight risk in religious matters for the sake of securing on easy terms the worldly advantages attendant on the sound secular instruction with which Dr. Duff accompanies his gift of Christian knowledge. These Hindoo parents flatter themselves that with their assistance they can enable their children to separate the wheat from the chaff.

But looking at it how we may, we shall acknowledge that this noble educational institution must have effected vast good in its time, even by its diffusion of British literature and science amongst the people of Bengal; and though very many indeed of its students may have rejected the Christian creed, they have all been made more or less familiar with Christian morality, and many of those truths of science which, as general education advances amongst them, must sooner or later shake the foundations of Hindooism.

Some persons have argued from Dr. Duff's successful introduction of the Bible into his private school that the Government ought to follow his example, and turn its own colleges into missionary institutions. But they forget that private individuals may do in India what a Government dare not. Any missionary may stand up in crowded streets of Calcutta and preach Christianity without the chance of causing the stones of the city to rise and mutiny; but the moment that a Government official, clothed in the authority of the State; or supposed to be so, acts in the same way, there is a fierce cry from the natives of "Our religion is in danger." So it is with the schools. Private schools are not regarded with the same suspicion as Government schools. Dr. Duff himself recognises this important distinction, and did not hesitate to sanction and support, with all his great local influence, the truly noble Education Despatch of July, 1854, which solved the religious difficulty in much the same way in which it has been solved in this country.

SENDING A THREATENING LETTER TO COLONEL BALFOUR, C.B.

Mr. Charles Bathoe, a gentleman of fortune, residing at 28, York place, Portman-square, appeared before Mr. Mansfield, at the Marylebone Police-court, on Thursday last, on a summons taken out against him by Colonel Balfour, R.A., C.B., for "that he did, on the 31st of December last, unlawfully send a letter to him, the said complainant, containing threats towards him, with intent to incite him to a breach of the peace."

Mr. Sleight appeared for Colonel Balfour, and Mr. Macdonald for the defendant.

Mr. Sleight, in opening the case, said: Sir, I have to appear before you to-day on behalf of Colonel Balfour, an officer in the Royal Artillery, who has greatly distinguished himself, and a gentleman who has spent many years in India. Both the complainant and defendant are related to each other, they having married sisters. The letter which I shall have to call to your notice has language in it which I am at a loss to understand how any gentleman of education or feeling could allow his pen to trace on paper. I will not read the whole of the letter at the present stage of the case, but the portion to which I wish more especially to call your worship's attention is dated on the 31st December, and commences "Sir," and is signed "C. Bathoe." It goes on to say, "That you (meaning Colonel Balfour) attach to your name C.B.; that you are a blackguard, there is no doubt; and that henceforth you shall be addressed by me in all letters as a contemptible blackguard."

After a few observations from Mr. Macdonald,

Colonel George Balfour was called. He said: I am a colonel in her Majesty's service, and have the honour to be a Companion of the Bath. Defendant is related to me by marriage, and the letter produced, dated the 31st of last month, is in his handwriting. [The letter was here read by the magistrate's clerk, but nothing more material or more interesting to the public was contained in it than that portion read by Mr. Sleight.] I am a member of the Oriental Club. The defendant is a member of the same club, and I have ascertained that he has circulated papers affecting my character among the members. He has told me that, on the first opportunity, at the club, he would address words to me that would oblige me to quit it. I have never committed such a breach of decorum as to justify his writing such a letter to me. Within the last few days he has had printed papers about me, and circulated at the club. The threats that he has conveyed to me I am apprehensive may lead to a breach of the peace.

Cross-examined by Mr. Macdonald: Mr. Bathoe did not entrust me with any letters in the sense in which you speak. I received what I call a surreptitious packet, which had been dropped into my letter-box at No. 6, Bryanston-square. It was put in there without my knowledge or sanction, and was addressed in an envelope as if it came from Lord Palmerston. I did not open it. It is now in my solicitor's possession. Defendant has applied to me for the packet, but not personally.

Mr. Sleight: That is all I have to ask, and I must now call upon you, sir, to give my client that protection which the law allows.

Mr. Macdonald: I may say I have only been recently instructed, and I venture to tell you, sir, that there is honestly more in this case than what appears on the surface; and if an adjournment is accorded to me I will undertake to bring about an amicable arrangement, and draw up a form of retraction.

Mr. Sleight said he must ask his worship now to stop any further argument by giving his decision.

Mr. Mansfield, after commenting upon the language the defendant had made use of, which he said was such that one gentleman ought never to make use of towards another, ordered him to enter into his own recognisance to keep the peace for the next twelve months in the sum of £1,000.

TELEGRAPH TO INDIA COMPANY.

The directors of this company in their half-yearly report state that the shareholders were informed last month that the Government had decided to retain in their own hands the construction of the Persian Gulf line, and that under those circumstances the directors recommended the shareholders to maintain and work their Egyptian line, and to await the result of the completion and working of the Persian Gulf line before deciding upon the course to be pursued. The directors have since found it necessary to discontinue for the present the station at Jubal, on account of the risk which was considered by the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company to attend their vessels calling for telegrams. Under these circumstances, the directors considered it the best course in the interests of the company to make arrangements with Messrs. Glass, Elliot, and Co., the lessees of the Malta and Alexandria cable, for working the Alexandria and Suez line for four years from the 1st of January, under which the line is to be worked and maintained in good condition, without any charge upon the company by the lessees who are to pay the company, so long as the Malta and Alexandria cable continues in working order, £2,500 a year during the term of the lease. This will enable the Board, unless any unforeseen accident arises, to pay a dividend to the shareholders during the next four years of from 4 to 5 per cent. per annum. The Board have obtained the sanction of the Viceroy of Egypt to construct a line to El Arish, with a view to completing the further communication to Beyrout, Iscanderoun, or Aleppo, and so connecting this company's line with Constantinople by one about to be constructed by the Ottoman Government from Diarbekir, on the direct line from Constantinople to India, and also by the Persian Gulf Telegraph with India, by which means a portion, and, in case of accident to the direct line, the whole of the India and China messages will pass through the company's lines. The capital account to the 31st of December shows that £45,175 had been received and £52,995 expended, including £1,538 outstanding accounts, leaving a balance of £7,820 against the company. The revenue account for the half-year shows that £3,691 had been received, and £3,293 expended, leaving, with £97 from the preceding account, a balance of £495.

MISCELLANEOUS.

APPOINTMENTS.—(Foreign office, Jan. 23).—The Queen has been graciously pleased to appoint Ronald Ferguson Thomson, now Oriental Secretary to her Majesty's Legation at the Court of Persia, to be Secretary to her Majesty's Legation at that Court.—(Jan. 24).—The Queen has been graciously pleased to appoint William John Dickson, Esq., now a Second Secretary in her Majesty's Diplomatic Service employed in her Majesty's Legation at the Court of Persia, to be Oriental Secretary to her Majesty's Legation at that Court. Mr. George Campbell, of the Bengal Civil Service, has been appointed a Judge of the High Court of Calcutta.

THE WRECK OF THE "JASON."—By letters received yesterday by the London and East India General Steam Shipping Company from their agent at Madras, respecting the stranding of the screw steamship Jason near that place, it is feared that the vessel will become a total loss. She had had a tedious passage owing to some defect in her propeller screw, and was making for Madras, when she went ashore at a place called Nivaton, six miles to the northward of Madras. It took place early in the morning, and on the intelligence reaching Madras, the company's agent, together with the Deputy Master attendant of the port, and Captain Consett, of Mr. Green's ship Lord Warden, lost no time in proceeding to the spot. The sister ship of the Jason, the Calcutta, belonging to the same company, which was on the point of starting on her voyage, took in tow a number of boats to assist in getting her off. The vessel was found lying partly embedded in the sands, about one hundred and twenty yards from the shore, and in such a position that it was evident she could not be got off until her cargo and machinery were taken out of her. All hands that could be spared were set to work to discharge her cargo, but owing to the heavy surf rolling in it was found to be a difficult task. It is anticipated that the whole of the cargo will be saved. The monsoons, however, which would set in in a few days when the mail left, would prevent any attempt being made towards saving the ship. The passengers and crew were safely got ashore, and were provided with lodgings at Madras. The Jason was built at Mare's-yard, Blackwall, in 1845, under special survey, for the General Screw Steam Shipping Company, and was a very fine vessel. She registered 2,600 gross tonnage. She was insured at Lloyd's and at the Marine-office for £50,000. Her cargo is reported to be valued at nearly £100,000.—Times, Jan. 29.

SIR CHARLES WOOD AND THE REJECTED BREACH OF CONTRACT LAW.—To make breach of contract penal is to place a workman, for violation of an agreement which he cannot read, binding him to pay sums with which he was tempted, in the hands of men armed with the whole strength of the Government, corrupt beyond all experience of European corruption, and cruel as they were described to be in the official "Torture Report" of Madras. It is serfage and nothing less which such a law would produce, and Sir Charles Wood in angrily prohibiting it did his duty as completely as he neglected it when he failed to authorise adequate County Courts. The Indian Government obeyed, of course, but proposed a new Bill. We cannot find the draught of this measure, but, from the language employed in debate, it appears to have provided a civil procedure, but levied the resulting damages by criminal process. In other words, it abolished the swift certainty of the first law, but still handed over the people to the tender mercies of the police; and Sir Charles Wood prohibited that also. He was right. We say deliberately, writing with full belief in the necessity for encouraging European settlement in India, it is better that such settlement should end, our Indian trade decay, or our Indian Empire perish, than that any such law should remain five years upon the statute-book. At the end of that time a hundred millions of labourers now free would be simply slaves, and a war of vengeance, to which the mutinies were a joke, would be organising in every district. In rejecting it Sir Charles Wood has displayed the instinct which belongs to the statesman of a free people, as well as the humanity which ought to be the first principle of a Government so terribly resistless as that of India.—Spectator.

BOOKS.

The Ganges and the Seine: Scenes on the Banks of Both. By Sidney Laman Blanchard. In two volumes. London: Chapman and Hall, 193, Piccadilly. 1862.

Mr. Sidney Laman Blanchard is a son of the highly-gifted and fine-natured Laman Blanchard, who wrote such elegant verses and such genial essays, and was the author of the "Memoirs of L. E. L." and whose own life was written as an introduction to his works by Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton. The present writer is, we believe, no relation or connection of the gentleman of nearly the same name—Mr. Lemon, or Leman, Blanchard—who has written so many light and popular pieces for the stage.

The first of these volumes is devoted almost exclusively to Oriental subjects on which the writer had gained information during his residence in Lower Bengal and the North-Western Provinces, and where he for some time exercised his talents in the editorship of the Mofussilite, and subsequently of the Bengal Hurkaru. The second volume is chiefly composed of subjects connected with scenes and characters in France, interspersed with a few reminiscences of the East. Most of the articles in both volumes are of a light and entertaining nature, with no great pretensions to philosophy or research, but almost every page indicates the ready and well-practised writer, and displays abundance of wit and humour. Yet the work is not only a very readable one, calculated to kill time, but contains a great deal of truthful information, very pleasantly and clearly expressed, about the climate and scenery of India, and the customs and manners of the natives and their English fellow-subjects there. Our Anglo-Indian readers now at home will be well pleased to renew their recollections of the East by the aid of Mr. Blanchard's lively and graphic pages. We have not space for a specimen of some of his best performances, which cannot be easily divided, but we must make room for the following description of the usual approaches to a rich Baboo's residence and of NATIVE THEATRICALS.

"Those of our readers who have ever lived in India have probably seen a native play performed at a native gentleman's house. In Calcutta, if the visitor be a person of any note, he will receive more invitations to representations of the kind than he cares to accept. Let us suppose that he avails himself of the invitation of, say, Baboo Simkinshrab Lalshrab Ghose, the great merchant and banker. The invitation is for eight o'clock, and at about that hour, having dined at seven, and being already in evening dress, he sets out. His destination is sure to be a long way off, as the European gentleman would infallibly live in the best quarter of the town, and the native gentleman would as infallibly live in the worst—which is the native gentleman's fault, by the way, as he came to the place first and had first choice. The house of the guest is situated in a street very much like what Park-lane in London is; that of the host in a street very like what Field-lane in London was; the thoroughfare between the two is, of course, characterised by a gradual declension from bad to worse, until it becomes as bad as the worst can be. The approach to the house is indicated by a horrible odour of oil and natives: the two scents being the more associated through the fact of the latter having a habit of rubbing the former over their skins.

"The effluvium of oil, however, proceeds mainly from large earthen pans with floating lights in them, placed along the road to mark the way, and from coloured lamps of the Vauxhall kind, neatly arranged wherever they can be most easily knocked down by the crowd; which is of a ragged and squalid description that we would defy anybody to find, out of the purlieus of an Eastern city. It is less ragged, perhaps, than it might be, if its members wore more clothes; for as in the majority of cases the garment is confined to the neighbourhood of the waist its holding on at all is a guarantee of its tolerable entirety; but with the slightest augmentation of the toilet the dilapidations begin, and these have an extent which put decency and adornment equally out of the question. Moreover, as the season for entertainments such as that of Baboo Simkinshrab Lalshrab Ghose is generally the 'cold weather,' and as cold nights in Calcutta are very apt to be damp, you may imagine the mist in which the whole scene is enveloped, all the oil lights to the contrary notwithstanding. Muggy would be a cold word to describe the state of the atmosphere; and one of those roaring thoroughfares in London where they sell fried fish, and everything else that can be sold cheap to an overflowing population on a Saturday night in November, can give but a faint idea of the sights, and the sounds, and the scents that assail our visitor as he nears his destination.

Great men's houses in Eastern cities usually turn their backs upon the public thoroughfare, and this of the Baboo shows nothing but a wall and a gate to the common people. Our visitor has probably driven himself to the place in his buggy, and here his syce, or groom, extricates himself from his perch behind, and endeavours to induce the people, now crowded more densely than ever, to get out of the way. This is accomplished after a great deal of getting under the horse's head, among his legs, and we are not sure that we may not add, through the spokes of the wheels, has been gone through on the part of the populace, and threats to 'walk into' them with his whip on the part of the Sahib, who at last finds himself in the court-yard, or 'compound,' as it is called—a curious word, which may be described, in racing parlance, as coming by corruption out of Portuguese. Inside the gateway there are more lights than ever, both of the pan on the ground and the Vauxhall variety, and on each side of the covered pathway, through which the Sahib, having alighted from his buggy, now proceeds, are statues the size of life: some popular, some classical, some both, and nearly all well known in Europe. They are cast in plaster for the most part, though one or two appear strangely built of wood, and are, in point of colour, what the heralds call 'proper'; all are more or less dirty and damaged, and contribute their share to the general effect of the approaches to the place—which is that of the place having a great holiday, and holding a final festivity, previous to being indicted for a nuisance.

"The house has a large open court in the centre, which, being covered over for the occasion, now forms the great reception-hall. Around, and accessible by flights of stairs, both from inside and outside, are the private apartments: to all of which the visitors have access, except those of the 'ladies of the house,' who may be observed, however, from behind semi-transparent screens, looking down upon the scene below with much curiosity, their chirpy voices suggesting the idea of innumerable birds upon branches. It is not considered well-bred to stare at the places whence these sounds come, or to take any notice, indeed, of the other signs of feminine existence, even though you occasionally see a pair of eyes shining through a (perhaps) chance hole in a curtain, or a hand and arm (beautifully braceleted) hastily closing the said curtain, which the said hand and arm have incautiously drawn aside. The hall, it must be said, is brilliantly lighted, and presents a general effect of mirrors, and gilding and oriental architecture, very pleasing to the eye. Below, upon a carpet, upon which no man not admitted to an equality may venture, is seated the host, smoking at intervals a hookah, which an attendant keeps studiously alight for him. It is here that he receives his guests, for whom, besides the play, he has provided such other amusements as can be obtained. Native minstrels in one part of the hall sing 'Taza, batata, now be now,' 'Hillee, pillee, punneah,' and other popular native songs, besides some English songs, of the class of 'Home, sweet home,' which they murder most melodiously. Nautch girls, elsewhere, go through the graceful attitudes which here pass for ballet, accompanied by the monotonous chant, which is the local substitute for opera. In another place may be found native jugglers, who perform the most wonderful feats without exciting anybody's wonder, and the most extraordinary delusions with which nobody is deluded. Should any wandering performers from Europe—Ethiopian serenaders, and the like—happen to be in Calcutta, they will most probably be engaged; and so you may choose between the east and the west in your music, as in your refreshments. As far as the latter are concerned, they consist mainly of attar and pan—the attar for the delectation of your fingers and your nose; the pan to put into your mouth, and to eat if you can. But in a room upstairs there is always laid out a British ball supper, with chicken and ham, jelly, trifle, and all complete, with 'champagne up to the mast-head,' as you may hear an enchanted ensign exclaim; but with the strange addition of bottles of brandy placed all down the table, varied at intervals by bottles of beer. The natives have a great notion of the sahib's powers of drinking the two last named liquids, and I fancy they expect the very few European ladies, who are usually present on such occasions, also to indulge in them. Of course, the host does not himself sit down to the feast; but the European guests, to do them justice, console themselves for his absence, and make themselves quite at home.

"The play, which is the prominent entertainment of the evening, takes place most likely at one end of the hall, where a stage is fitted up after the manner of temporary erections of the kind in most other places—at a country-house in England, for example. In front are a sufficient number of seats for the more devoted adherents of the drama, who take their places at the beginning of the evening, and keep them until the end, whenever that may be. The latter period is a little doubtful, for nobody is in a hurry, and the construction of the drama appears to be such that it may end whenever the performers or the audience please, and may be carried on as long as either can keep awake. We doubt whether any of the European guests ever saw one out, especially if they have been paying much attention to the supper up-stairs. But we believe the performance generally lasts all night, 'and when they ring the morning bell the battle scarce is done.'

Mr. Blanchard takes up the cause of the indigo planters versus the ryots. Though we agree with him in the main we cannot endorse all his opinions in this case. Perhaps he does not know what is nevertheless really the fact, that the disputes between the planters and the ryots were in a great degree due to the injudicious interference of the missionaries, who had mistakenly imagined that the planters had exhibited their ill-will towards native converts to Christianity. The planters were terribly scandalised by the Rev. Mr. Cuthbert and others. It was the Rev. Mr. Cuthbert, we believe, who absurdly and most extravagantly asserted that "every chest of indigo was stained with human blood." One of the missionaries pronounced the indigo planters to be more brutal than the Sonthals (who are so well described by Mr. Blanchard in the work before us), and another said that when the acts of tyranny committed by the planters reached England they would make an impression greater than that produced by the horrors in "Uncle Tom;" and a third accused them of "incontinence, severity, and brutality." The indigo-planters, regarded as a large class, and not judged of unfairly by individual exceptions, do no discredit to their own country, and their presence is a real blessing to India. It is not the men, but their system, that we object to—we mean their system of advances to the ryots, which keeps those poor wretches from father to son in a state of hopeless debt and dependence. And yet some of the opponents of the planters have acknowledged that their despotism is, on the whole, at least a mild one, and that the planter zemindar is the best landlord in India, and that his ryots are generally the most comfortable. The native zemindars, speaking generally, are terribly severe upon their unfortunate ryots. The jungle soon disappears from the estate of the energetic English planter, and the rent of land rises in his neighbourhood. If we could multiply the number of English planters in India a hundred-fold, they would, no doubt, improve in proportion the healthfulness of the climate and the condition of the people and the security of our Indian Empire. Lord William Bentinck, after the most careful inquiry, strongly urged upon the Court of Directors the policy of encouraging the indigo planters and other European capitalists and "interlopers" to settle in the country, and many natives of high character supported his views. "As to indigo planters," said the famous Rammohun Roy, "I beg to observe that I have travelled through several districts in Bengal and Behar, and I found the natives residing in the neighbourhood of indigo plantations better clothed and better conditioned than those who lived at a distance from such stations." "There may have been partial injury done by the indigo planters," continues the same high authority, "but on the whole they have performed more good to the generality of the natives of this country than any other class of Europeans, whether in or out of the service." The best friends of the indigo planters could hardly desire a more favourable or more valuable testimony to their general character than this, and yet this class of Englishmen have been selected for especial "damnation" by the missionaries. We are not sorry, however, that the local Government is indisposed to support with stringent laws a system that places the poor ryot entirely at the mercy of his employer, for no class of men in a free state ought to be trusted with unlimited power over any individual, however humble.

MILITARY EDUCATION.—The Rev.

CHARLES J. HUGHES, M.A. (Wrangler, Cambridge, 1852), Rector of Perrivale (population 32), begs to inform his Friends that he has REMOVED from the Finchley-road to his Residence (built expressly for him), CASTLEBAR-COURT, EALING, W., where he receives both Senior and Junior Pupils to prepare for the Army, Military Colleges, and the Civil Service.

MILITARY and NAVAL EDUCATION.—

A MARRIED CLERGYMAN, resident at Brighton, RECEIVES a limited number of PUPILS, between the ages of Twelve and Fifteen, who may be destined for the Military and Naval Professions. With a view to this ultimate object, the entire course of Study, from the outset, is regulated expressly in conformity with the requirements of the Examinations at Addiscombe, Sandhurst, Woolwich, and Portsmouth; and every care is taken to direct special attention to those subjects likely to prove professionally useful in the future career of the Naval or Military officer. The Pupils are examined periodically in Mathematics by Professor J. R. YOUNG, formerly of Belfast College, and Author of "A Course of Mathematics, Pure and Mixed, for the Use of Candidates for the Military and Civil Service Examinations," &c.; and also in Classics and Modern Languages by Scholars of repute. Prospectuses may be had of Messrs. ALLEN and Co., 13, Waterloo-place, London, S.W.

HINDOOSTANI AND PERSIAN.

LESSONS in the above LANGUAGES are given by an INDIAN GENTLEMAN of Twenty Years' Experience as Professor, Interpreter, and Translator; who has obtained Certificates of degrees of honour and high proficiency from the Examiners of the College of Fort William. He possesses the most satisfactory testimonials, and can give unexceptionable references.

INDIA OUTFITS.—NOTICE.

Thresher's India Tweed Suits, Thresher's Kashmir Flannel Shirts, Thresher's India Gauze Waistcoats,

were invented and are manufactured exclusively by THRESHER and GLENNY, and for which the International Exhibition Medal of 1863; the Exhibition Medal of 1851; and the Madras Medal of 1856 have been awarded.—The high character and universal approval of these articles have led to a number of inferior imitations, all of which are advertised under similar, but triflingly altered names, and, therefore, Messrs. THRESHER and GLENNY feel it necessary to announce that the India Gauze Waistcoats, the Kashmir Flannel Shirts, and the India Tweed Suits can only be procured at their establishment.

FIRE! THIEVES!! FIRE!!!

C. H. GRIFFITHS having purchased nearly all the best quality of Fire-proof Safes from the International Exhibition of 1862, including those made by Messrs. Perry, Chatwood, Rhodes, and other eminent makers, is enabled to offer them at half the original cost. The patented improvements of the latter maker render it an impossibility for fire to take any effect under any circumstances of time and place. In consequence of the increasing demand for these essential and valuable repositories, which no house of business, or, indeed, private house (where plate, books, and documents are kept) should be without, in these hazardous and dangerous times, C. H. G. has taken additional premises, 3, Pentonville-road, opposite the Angel, Islington, where he also intends to keep a variety of Second-hand Safes by those eminent large makers, Milner, Price, Mordan, &c., at half the price of new. Sketches, with prices, free by post.

NOTHING IMPOSSIBLE.—The greatest and most useful invention of the day, AQUA AMARELLA.—Messrs. JOHN GOSNELL and Co., Three King-court, Lombard-street, Perfumers to her Majesty, respectfully offer to the public this truly marvellous fluid, which gradually restores the human hair to its pristine hue—no matter at what age. The Aqua Amarella has none of the properties of dyes; it, on the contrary, is beneficial to the system, and when the hair is once restored one application per month will keep it in perfect colour. Price one guinea per bottle.

THE BEAUTIES of the EAST.—All that can preserve and enhance the charms of woman, youth, and beauty.—Madame RACHEL begs leave to inform the nobility, aristocracy, and her lady patronesses that she has just received a costly consignment of ARABIAN PREPARATIONS, which render the hair, teeth, and complexion beautiful beyond comparison; and the choicest Arabian perfumes—fac simile of which was presented in golden vases by the ladies of Paris to the Empress Eugénie, and have gained for her the patronage of royalty.—Can be selected at, or forwarded from, her Drawing-room Saloon, 47a, New Bond-street.

CHILDREN'S WORM TABLETS

Prepared and sold in Tins of various sizes by THOMAS KEATING, Chemist, &c., 79, St. Paul's Churchyard, London, E.C., and Retail by all Druggists and Patent Medicine Vendors in the World.

OBSERVE the words "KEATING'S WORM TABLETS" are engraved on the Government Stamp of each Tin, without which none are genuine.

CORYZINE.—This invaluable, non-sternutative POWDER, employed like Snuff, affords instantaneous relief in incipient cases of cold, Influenza or Coryza, the sense of suffocation with excessive secretion supervening, being in both cases effectually removed. To those subject to this distressing complaint it is confidently recommended as a sure remedy.

RUPTURES.—BY ROYAL LETTERS PATENT.

WHITE'S MOC-MAIN LEVER TRUSS

is allowed by upwards of two hundred medical gentlemen to be the most effective invention in the curative treatment of HERNIA. The use of a steel spring, so hurtful in its effects, is here avoided, a soft bandage being worn round the body, while the requisite resisting power is supplied by the MOC-MAIN PAD and PATENT LEVER, fitting with so much ease and closeness that it cannot be detected, and may be worn during sleep. A descriptive circular may be had, and the Truss (which cannot fail to fit), forwarded by post, on the circumference of the body two inches below the hips being sent to the manufacturer.

Mr. JOHN WHITE, 228, Piccadilly, London.

To prevent spurious imitations, please to observe that the words "KEATING'S COUGH LOZENGES" are engraved on the Government Stamp of each Box, without which none are genuine.

KEATING'S COUGH LOZENGES.

JUDGED BY THE IMMENSE DEMAND, this UNIVERSAL REMEDY now stands the first in public favour and confidence; this result has been acquired by the test of fifty years' experience. These Lozenges may be found on sale in every British Colony, and throughout India and China they have been highly esteemed wherever introduced. For COUGHS, ASTHMA, and all affections of the Throat and Chest, they are the most agreeable and efficacious remedy.

Prepared and sold in Boxes, Tins, and Bottles of various sizes by THOMAS KEATING, Chemist, &c., 79, St. Paul's Churchyard, London. Sold retail by all Druggists and Patent Medicine Vendors in the World.

Quintessence of Jamaica Ginger and Camomile.

GINGER has long been deservedly known as an excellent domestic medicine, and, combined with camomile, it is the most efficient stomachic tonic known, for while the ginger relieves the stomach from distension and flatulency, arising from impaired digestion, the camomile strengthens the coats of the stomach, and by that means gives it a healthy and invigorating tone. So highly concentrated is this preparation, it is unimpaired by age or climate, and well adapted for portation. In Gout, Spasms, Dysentery, Cholera, or those complaints incidental to tropical climates, it is invaluable, as in numerous cases a dose or two has checked and frequently cured most alarming attacks. No family should be without it. Sold in half-pints, quarter-pints, and one-ounce pints.

Agreeable Seidlitz Powder, in one bottle, protected by a case, with measure and spoon included. The advantage of this preparation is the perfect combination of the solid ingredients of the Seidlitz Spring in one compound powder.

It is very cooling and refreshing, well adapted for exportation, or travellers by land or sea.

Aromatic Tincture of Quinoidine.—For the prevention of Fever, Intermittent or Remittent Ague, and other effects of Malaria.

No person exposed to the influence or predisposing cause of Fevers should be without it, for if taken in small doses daily the system will become so thoroughly impregnated with its principles as to be rendered proof against all attacks of Contagion or Malaria.—Sold in pints, half-pints, and quarter-pints. The above articles prepared only by THOS. WILKINSON (late Wilkinson, Bridge, & Co.), 270, Regent-street, London, W.

PRITCHARD'S DANDELION, CAMOMILE, RHUBARB, and GINGER PILLS.

—This peculiar preparation of Dandelion acts particularly on the liver, thus avoiding the use of mercurials, and will be found invaluable to parties suffering from a sluggish state of that organ, or who have resided in India or other hot climates; whilst the well known stomachic efficacy of camomile, rhubarb, and ginger, renders these pills the most happy combination possible; and as many are at a loss for a safe remedy they will find this medicine a great convenience, which may be resorted to by all persons at any age, under any circumstances, and without the least inconvenience.

Prepared by W. Pritchard, Apothecary, 65, Charing-cross, London, in bottles, 1s. 1d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. May be had of all Medicine Vendors.

DINNEFORD'S PURE FLUID MAGNE-

SIA has been, during twenty-five years, emphatically sanctioned by the Medical Profession, and universally accepted by the Public, as the Best Remedy for Acidity of the Stomach, Heartburn, Headache, Gout, and Indigestion, and as a Mild Aperient for delicate constitutions, more especially for Ladies and Children. When combined with the Acidulated Lemon Syrup, it forms an agreeable Effervescent Draught, in which its Aperient qualities are much increased. During Hot Seasons, and above all, in Hot Climates, the regular use of this simple and elegant remedy has been found highly beneficial. It is prepared in a state of perfect purity and of uniform strength by DINNEFORD and Co., 172, New Bond-street, London; and sold by all respectable Chemists throughout the World.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—FRESH AND BLOOD.

It is incontestable that the soundness and firmness of the flesh depend upon the strength and purity of the blood. These Pills, on this account, have come into such universal favour, no other medicine being able to approach them as purifying agents. For the same reason Holloway's Pills are admirably adapted for the young and weakly, to whom tainted blood is a fruitful source of suffering. This medicine is a mild aperient and reviving tonic, and does its wholesome work quietly, seasonably, and completely. Occasional doses of these Pills keep the digestion in good order, strengthen the stomach, and set the liver right when its functions are deranged by cold, excess, or other causes.

BY DAVID THOMAS ANSTED, M.A., F.R.S., &c.

AND

ROBERT GORDON LATHAM, M.A., M.D., F.R.S., &c.

The Illustrations drawn on Wood expressly for the Work, by PAUL J. NAFTEL, Member of the London Society of Painters in Water Colours.

"The 'Channel Islands' is an excellent book of its class—well conceived, well written, well illustrated, well printed. It is the produce of many hands, and every hand a good one. Nearly every thing which a man can desire to know about Jersey, Guernsey, Alderney, and Sark—about their history, Geography, and natural history—Professor Ansted and Dr. Latham have contrived to tell. Altogether the contents of the volume are as varied and interesting as a well-sustained drama; and to this drama no more graceful and picturesque scenery could have been furnished than we find in the illustrations so profusely given by artists worthy of the subject and equal to their worth—Paul Nafel and M. Petere Le Lièvre. The result is not a merely handsome volume of the old 'Keepsake' style, made to sell and be looked at, but a book of rare merit and value, made for instruction and delight, to be read with pleasure and to be referred to with profit."—Athenaeum, Nov. 15, 1862.

MAILS TO INDIA.

Mails to India and China, via Marseilles, are despatched from London as follows, viz.:—Those for Bombay packets, on the evening of the 3rd and 18th of each month; and those for Calcutta packets (including mails for Ceylon, Madras, and China), on the evenings of the 10th and 26th of each month. When any of these dates falls on a Sunday, the mails are made up on the following evening.

Letters and Newspapers can be forwarded to any part of India, via Bombay and Marseilles, and in most cases will reach their destination some days sooner than if despatched by the following Calcutta mail. The Bombay mails via Southampton, however, are no longer available for the transmission of Letters or Newspapers to the Madras Presidency.

Mails for the Mediterranean and all parts of India and China, except the Bombay Presidency, are despatched via Southampton on the mornings of the 4th and 20th, or, when either of these dates falls on Sunday, upon the previous evening.

Mails for the Mediterranean, the Presidency of Bombay, and Upper or North-West Provinces of Bengal and China, are despatched via Southampton, on the 12th and 27th of the month, except when these dates fall on Sunday, in which case they are forwarded on the previous evening.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

LORD ELGIN and suite were to have left Calcutta for Simla on the 3rd of this month. Sir Robert Napier, as senior member of Council, would act as President during the absence of his Excellency.

Sir Charles Trevelyan and his family landed at Madras on Thursday, the 8th of January. His Excellency the Governor and other gentlemen went on board the steamer to offer him their cordial welcome. Sir Charles was first escorted to the office of Messrs. Arbuthnot and Co., where he was presented with an address from the inhabitants of Madras. Surely it ought to have been presented in some public hall. The Address from the Chamber of Commerce was also presented to him at the office of the same distinguished merchants. Sir Charles's replies were considered rather guarded, and provoked some animadversions on that score. We think Sir Charles acted very rightly after what had happened to him for too plain speaking. "I have not yet," said Sir Charles, "had an opportunity of knowing the wishes of the Governor-general or the opinions of my colleagues in council; you will not expect me to enter upon the financial topics adverted to in your address; but this I may safely say, that our object will always be to provide, by a vigilant and frugal administration of the finances, the means of relieving taxation where it most presses, of strengthening the establishments for the protection of person and property, and of assisting the development of the resources of the country and the intellectual and moral well-being of its inhabitants." By a telegram from Bombay dated 28th Jan. we learn that Sir Charles had reached Calcutta, but the date of his arrival is not given.

The Feroze, with Lady Elgin on board, was announced as on the river Hooghly on the 7th January.

The Supreme Government of India has sanctioned the extension of the lines of telegraph on the North-Western Frontier as a measure of political expediency.

We regret to have had accounts of the probable cereal and other productions in Meerut and the surrounding districts. A scarcity is anticipated, and unfortunately the Ganges Canal is now dry. There has not been the usual fall of rain.

Letters from the Jynteah Hills, dated 26th of December, from Omwai Poonjee, mention that the rebel Cossyahs had constructed two strong stockades about ten miles from Omwai, and were entrenched in considerable strength; the British force being prevented from acting against them for the want of howitzers, which were expected from Cherra Poonjee.

The Madras Athenæum tells us that Sir Hugh Rose's "recal or resignation" has been announced in India by telegrams from home; that Sir Hope Grant is to succeed him, and General Beresford is to be Commander-in-chief at Madras. Some of the Indian papers say that Sir R. Airey is to be the new Commander-in-Chief: others name Sir W. Mansfield. But all this talk "stands in need of confirmation."

A seat on the bench of the High Court at Madras will soon be vacated by Mr. Justice Strange; Mr. Norton has been named as his successor. The names of Mr. Collett, Mr. Dale, and Mr. Holloway, have also been connected with the appointment.

It is stated in the Times of India that Mr. C. Erskine received notice from the Home Government that he must at once decide whether he would keep his seat in the Governor-General's Legislative Council or on the Bench of the Bombay High Court. The honourable gentleman has preferred the judgeship, and was to have returned to Bombay this month.

The Friend of India observes that the reply of the Secretary of State for India to the memorial of the Civil Service, though by no means conceding what was asked for, "is almost as favourable as could be expected." On the whole, the rules as to pension and sick leave are pronounced an improvement on the former state of things, while as to privilege and special leave they are the opposite.

The City of Palaces is to have a street railway, connecting the terminus of Sealdah with the river Hooghly.

A Bill is now preparing which proposes a sort of mayoralty for the municipal Government of Calcutta.

The stranded steamer Jason, now off Jennore, has been quite abandoned as an irrecoverable wreck. No lives were lost, and a portion of the cargo was saved.

The officers, non-commissioned officers, and privates of the 102nd Regiment, at Bangalore, have contributed 1,423 rupees to the Lancashire Relief Fund.

We are glad to hear that the insult offered to two British officers at Jhansi, who were arrested and sent to the police-station by the military servants of Scindiah, has not been passed over quietly. The principal person concerned in the outrage has been sentenced to ten years' imprisonment (perhaps, even too severe a punishment), and others have been incarcerated for various shorter periods.

There is in the Englishman, of the 8th of January, a highly interesting report on the present condition of Mr. Bethune's Hindu Female School. The late Mr. Bethune, the founder, shed tears of deep emotion on the day on which this school was opened (now some fourteen years ago), and on his deathbed he sent for two of the secretaries to Government to urge them to solicit Lord Dalhousie to give his support to the institution. His Lordship at once consented. By zealous exertions and great personal influence Mr. Bethune contrived to obtain the attendance at his school of many poor native female children of rather low caste, but after his death the institution gradually declined for some time. It is now, however, once more in a promising condition. The number of students on the rolls is 93. The cost of each student to the Government is about £9 a-year. Every encouragement is given to parents to send their children, and omnibuses are engaged to convey the girls to and fro between their homes and the school. The wealthier and higher classes of the natives, however, still withhold their patronage, but they begin to employ European governesses for their female children at their own homes.

From the Jyntea Hills intelligence has been received of the capture of a rebel chief and eight of his associates.

The Bank of Bengal has declared a dividend for the half-year at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum, free of Income-tax.

Her Majesty's 92nd Highlanders embarked for England on or about the 20th of January, on the ships Surrey and Middlesex. This regiment has seen a good deal of active service in India, and played a conspicuous part in the suppression of the mutiny in 1857.

Mr. Byranjee Jejeebhoy, a wealthy Parsee merchant of Bombay, has sent Rs. 70,000 for immediate remittance to England as a loan, without interest, to the home committee of the Lancashire Relief Fund.

There was a report in Bombay that Charles Kean, the famous actor, was about to visit that presidency, after a visit to Australia.

There have been several accidents lately on the East India Railway. On the 4th of January an engine and eight carriages were greatly injured, but no passengers suffered. On the 7th a poor native crossing the rails was cut to pieces.

Though the Contract Law in favour of the indigo planters was so decidedly and properly rejected by Sir Charles Wood, the Lieutenant-governor of Bengal has issued an important notification, to the effect that, under the provisions of Section V. Act XIII. of 1859, entitled "An Act to provide for the punishment of breaches of contract by artificers, workmen, and labourers in certain cases," his Honour is pleased to extend the operation of the said Act to the station of Howrah and to the suburbs of Calcutta.

Mr. Blyth, the curator of the Calcutta Museum, has resigned his post, and is on his way home. We are sorry to hear that, after twenty years' hard and good service, he has been refused a pension. Mr. Blyth, it is true, was not in the direct service of the Government, but he has done much for science in India; and having worked so long and so uninterruptedly in "the vapour bath of Bengal" as to be compelled to return to England on account of ill health, it is hard that the authorities at home should suffer him to return to his native country almost a pauper. The local Government, in his case, consented to relax the rule which limits pensions to officers in the direct service of the State, and to grant his application, but this decision was overruled by the home authorities.

Petitions were presented to Parliament on Wednesday (Feb. 11th) by Colonel Sykes from Capt. A. M. McDougall, of the late 3rd Madras European Regiment, stating that his rights and privileges as an officer had been infringed by the amalgamation, and praying for redress; and from Captain Burges, of the same regiment, and to the same effect, but adding that his case is peculiarly grievous, he, an officer of fourteen years' standing in the regiment, being superseded by an officer junior to himself of only eight years' standing in the regiment, such being contrary to the usages of the service.

The Times of this morning publishes an address to Sir Charles Wood on the subject of his rejection of the law of contract in India. Sir Charles's policy on this point is highly commended in the address, which is signed by above 150 noblemen, bishops, and gentlemen of high character and position, and great influence. Many of them are, or have been, connected with the civil and military services of India. The Times has a leader upon the subject, supporting the arguments of the address. It seems to be pretty generally felt in England that to try and punish a breach of contract between a powerful European landlord or planter and a poor helpless Hindoo ryot as a criminal offence, rendering him liable to imprisonment with hard labour, would be a measure intolerably harsh. The Times justly explains that it would not be cruel to the individual ryot only, but act as a discouragement to trade and commerce, for it would tend to frighten away native dealers and labourers from all connection with Europeans so armed with the law. The ryots are willing enough to work when work is profitable; but they complain that they cannot make indigo crops remunerative on the terms on which they are now grown, under engagements to the planters, but that in consequence of the advance system they are held to involuntary servitude.

Lord Ellenborough is to present to-morrow a petition from Indian officers, complaining of the loss of certain advantages they consider to have been guaranteed to them by Parliament. The Duke of Argyll is to support the petition.

The number of petitions to be presented to-morrow night is thirty-one. Of these twenty-one have reference to hardships arising out of the staff corps.

BENGAL.

MEMBERS OF THE INDIAN BAR AND THE MOFUSSIL.

The Indian Jurist says that the time has now arrived when it behoves members of the bar in India to take some decisive step, whereby they may be enabled to practise in the Mofussil on terms consistent with their professional dignity as well as with their feelings as gentlemen. If we are not altogether misinformed, the business of a Mofussil practitioner depends not so much on his zeal, his ability, or his success, as on the amount of commission he offers the mooktear or law agent. We are well aware that there are members of the bar who habitually attend Mofussil courts, and who steadily set their faces against this practice, but they are few in number, and they are men who, from their experience, their talents, and the reputation they have earned, are able to command business without having recourse to artificial means. Hitherto barristers, as a rule, have practised exclusively in the Presidency Courts, but now there appears to be a growing disposition to extend the sphere of their operations. Whatever may be the final result of the abolition of the old procedure in the Presidency Courts, it is clear that at present the effect has been to cause an extraordinary diminution in the business of advocates. There is every reason to believe that, when the arrears of business shall have been cleared off in the court lately presided over by Mr. Justice Norman, that its sittings will be intermittent. This may or may not be considered a healthy sign by the public; though, in passing, we may remark, that it has been observed by a profound thinker, that the diminution of litigation in the courts of a country is in proportion to the decay of its institutions. It is quite possible that this dearth of business arises from temporary and adventitious causes. But contemporaneously with this diminution, there has been a large influx of barristers in the three Presidencies, who must be provided for. The moment, therefore, seems to be an opportune one for the bar, and chiefly for junior members of the bar, acting in concert with their seniors, and with the countenance of the judges, devise such measures as may be deemed advisable to protect themselves from the rapacity of native law agents.

In the first place, then, the present system of giving commission must be entirely abolished. It amounts to nothing more than a fraudulent compact between the pleader and the mooktear to cheat the client. At any hazard this most obnoxious system must be abolished, and that as early as possible. Indian legislators are too prone to succumb to the prejudices of natives, though of late years, it must be admitted, they have made some strong and laudable efforts to overcome them. Nor have the judges been idle. Sir M. Wells has laboured hard, and in a measure successfully, to defeat the objects of the benames system, and to check the practice of hiring witnesses, although in so doing he has ruined a large and influential class. The Chief Justice read very recently a severe lesson to Rajahs and Bahadoors, who are above appearing in court to give evidence in their own behalf, preferring to rely on the testimony of their dependents.

These are healthy signs indeed, and we should wish to see them followed up by a blow aimed at the system now prevailing, in what was formerly the Sudder Court, in regard to the employment of vakeels.

We are very far from casting any slur upon the gentlemen now practising in what was formerly the Sudder Court, nor do we care particularly to inquire upon what system they individually proceed. It has been the practice for vakeels to allow commission, and that practice is, to some extent, recognised by the Court. We venture, however, to observe that the practice is altogether objectionable. In the abstract, there appears to be nothing morally wrong in allowing commission to a native law agent upon the amount of business he brings; but, as the benchers of the Middle Temple remarked, in the case of Mr. Digby

Seymour, in practice it operates to the detriment of the client, whose interest it should be the first care of the legal profession to study. Were the commission given by the vakeels fixed, the practice, though still objectionable, would lose much of its evil effect; but when, as at present, there is no fixed limit, and a kind of monetary competition takes place, it is obvious that the agent will select a pleader more with reference to the commission he offers than to his ability or experience. This difficulty in regard to the commission has been a stumbling block in the way of barristers practising in the Sudder, and we humbly conceive that it will always be a stumbling block until some strong and efficacious measure be adopted to break the back of the present system. It is, of course, impossible to determine what measures should be adopted, until the sense of the profession be taken, but, as we have already remarked, the judges of the High Court should be the chief instruments in bringing about a reform. They are, beyond any other functionaries of the State, guardians of the client's interest, and most assuredly it is not for the client's interest that a compact of a fraudulent character should be entered into between his law agent and his pleader.

A PLEA FOR LIFE.

There are few more difficult questions in casuistry, and certainly none more important in practical politics and social science, than the point at which immorality passes into criminality. Should a drunkard whose vice is sure in a large proportion of cases to lead to crime,—should a debauchee who sins not only against his own body, but against his family and posterity, at any part of their career be arrested by the arm of the law and put under restraint? In the former case, among at least one Anglo-Saxon people, the difficulty has been met by considering the drunkard a lunatic, subject to a disease known as dipsomania, for the victims of which great hospitals have been erected and State laws have been passed. Apart altogether from the fact that the instinct of true Englishmen rebels against any, even the slightest, approach to interference with the free will of the citizen, except on the most indubitable evidence of the injury which he does to society as well as to himself and his family, the question may best be answered by the consideration, that it is in the power of a well ordered government, to a large extent, to prevent the vice of either drunkenness or uncleanness. If governments keep pace with the growth of society in complexity and of civilisation in what we may call nervous refinement, the crave which drunkenness and prostitution supply would be met by innocent and lawful means. To avoid the latter Mormonism has recourse to polygamy, and oriental nations to the same, combined with early marriages, which deteriorate the race. Still, wherever the free will of men is concerned, there are and always will be difficulties, whether we inquire into the origin, the best means for the prevention, or the best remedies for the consequences of evil. But there is one subject belonging to this class of questions, encompassed with almost no such difficulties. A man may, by vice, destroy his own body and ruin those of his family through many generations; but it becomes the Government under which he lives, especially if it glory in being at once benevolent and despotic, to prevent all other evils which are hostile to life. There can be no doubt of the necessity laid upon every State to provide for the public weal by sanitary measures. If a man drinks himself to death the State may look on uncaringly; but if from the absence, the continued and obstinate neglect, of the most common sense, inexpensive and ultimately economical measures of hygiene, the ruling body literally allows to be killed thousands of the very beings who are so valuable to it, the responsibility rests with the authorities. Every man and every household, for their own sakes, ought to know and obey the simple laws of health; but if they will not do so then it becomes the State despotically to do it for them. And even if individuals did all they ought there are still such measures as those of drainage and water supply which only Government assistance can furnish.

There is no Government on earth which more systematically neglects its duty in sanitary matters, or which can more easily discharge that duty, than the Government of India. It professes to be, and it is, benevolent in its aims, establishing asylums and dispensaries to save life at no little cost. Its constitution is such that it could do in a year what England would require a quarter of a century's discussion to effect. It rules nearly two hundred millions of human beings, whom it wishes to attract to itself by kind yet firm administration, and whose labour is the commodity which, of all others, is most valuable to the country and the world. It consists of several thousand Englishmen, of high attainments, special training and incalculable value after a few years from their experience, whose lives cannot be estimated in money. Its greatest security is an army of 75,000 men, every one of whom is so precious and so expensive that one of the first native warriors India has seen said he would keep them, if they were his, like princes. It professes to be anxious to attract a class of healthy and educated men from England to settle in the country. Yet it is a melancholy fact that the cities, the stations, the cantonments in which these settlers, soldiers, and civilians are placed are built and maintained in defiance of the simplest laws of health; while so indifferent is this otherwise benevolent and wise Government to the terrible mortality of both its own members and its subjects that it will not inquire into their numbers, will not assist in discovering the causes so as to supply the remedy. Political reasons may be assigned for this culpable carelessness in the provinces, but not even in the presidency cities, not even among Christians, is there a census of the population, or a legal registration of births and deaths. Half a century hence posterity will wonder at the suicidal folly of their barbarous predecessors.

In the three capitals of India there are many earnest inquirers, who need only the assistance of an enactment by the local legislatures to discover, at the trifling cost of a few hundred pounds a year, the nature and extent of the evils which destroy life in the tropics so rapidly, with the view of applying the remedy. In Bombay reliable statistics are now collected by Dr. Haines at a cost of £120 a year to Government, but the census of the city and island is only a matter of approximation. In Madras Dr. Cornish has just issued a most valuable statistical report on the mortality of 1860, but here again the number of the population, the root and standard of all comparison, is only guessed at. In Calcutta Dr. H. Macpherson obtained, by a most toilsome process, accurate statistics of only Protestant mortality, and authorities like Drs. Chevers and Brougham have been trying to rouse their fellow citizens, by eloquent appeals based on most alarming truths, to some slight attention to the laws which regulate health. All their investigations show the state of Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay to be as disgraceful to the English name and Government, as the encouragement of suttee and infanticide would be. We shall not deluge our readers with figures, but in the little table we have carefully compiled, and which we believe to be below the truth, there are results which should appal the most careless and rouse the most apathetic:—

City.	Population.	Deaths in all classes.	Rate per 1000.	Most fatal month.
Madras ...	450,000	13,498 (Year 1860)	30	September.
Bombay ...	600,000	15,863 (Year 1861)	37½	April.
Calcutta ...	750,000	18,708 (Year 1860)	41	April.

These figures show the discovered and reported deaths only. As to the native population we feel assured the rate per 1,000 should be raised by at least 10 to find the real result. Dr. Macpherson gives a comparative table, quoted by Dr. Chevers in his lecture to the Bethune Society, showing the annual death rate in every 1,000 of population:—

Tasmania (rural) ...	11 and a fraction.
Do. (general) ...	16 "
England and Wales (general in the 64 healthiest districts) ...	17 "
Great Britain ...	22 "
City of London proper ...	24 "
London ...	25 "
France ...	28 "
Prussia ...	29 "
MADRAS ...	30 "
Austria ...	32 "
Russia ...	33 "
Liverpool (highest in England) ...	33½ "
London in the cholera year, 1849 ...	33½ "
BOMBAY ...	37½ "
CALCUTTA—Hindoos ...	39 "
Do. Mussulmans ...	42 "
London in the 16th century ...	50 "
Do. do. Great Plague ...	80 "

Truly, as we read these figures, we may say of the three Indian capitals, with Dr. John Armstrong—

"Fly the rank city, shun its turbid air;
Breathe not the chaos of eternal smoke
And volatile corruption from the dead,
The dying, sickening and the living world
Exhaled, to sully heaven's transparent dome
With dire mortality."

If this is true of London, how much more of Indian cities? Madras owes its comparative healthiness to the large area over which its population is spread, which is thrice that of Calcutta and Bombay, though its numbers are much less. If to these figures we add the fact, that at Quilon, Jaulna, and Bellary, the death rate of the sepoy army, a picked body of males, was only seven per thousand, while in all Madras it is only eighteen in the thousand, or a third more than the English average, we shall have an idea of to what an extent disease is preventible, and of how great a responsibility rests upon our Government.

The medical authorities of Bombay and Madras, and now, we believe, the statistical committee of Calcutta, have urged the first step to remedy all this, a census of, at least, all Christians, and the registration of births and deaths by law. This at least the State must do, while private enterprise assisted by it obtains sweet water for Madras and Calcutta, and drainage for the three capitals. As Dr. Chevers says, we are at present like a host of men struck down by a mysterious death in a dark room, knowing only that many yet live, and that corpses are heaped all around us, but unable even to guess how many survive and how many have fallen. We may well, on this Christmas Day, ask the Government of India what is the use of its despotism if it permits at least twenty human beings in every thousand to die every year from preventible causes.—Friend of India.

THE GANGES CANAL.

On a former occasion, when noticing Sir Charles Trevelyan's appointment to the financial position in the Supreme Government, for which he is so eminently fitted, we said that he would probably have to perform invidious duties, which might greatly dim the bright halo of popularity that now surrounds his appointment. We feel no doubt that our anticipations will be realised, and that he will early find it incumbent on him to commence inquiries and reforms of a nature unpalatable to many servants of the State. Perhaps the department of public works stands the best chance of first passing through the ordeal of his revision, as he left it confessedly in a very defective state, which has not been much improved during the interval of his absence. We are not going to take up the cry proceeding from some quarters, and to compare the department with the venerable knife inherited by the Scotchman from his grandfather, which required a new blade and a new handle to render it of any use to him—because we are certain that the body in question has done and is doing great things for India, and deserves no mean amount of gratitude on account of its services to the rulers and the people of this country; but we have no doubt whatever that a thorough overhauling and weeding of the department is urgently needed, and that he will very soon have to commence the work as one measure of re-trenchment, which is perfectly consistent with the enlarged expenditure on the works themselves, contemplated by Mr. Laing. If the department were remodelled, considerable economy would prove one result, and increased efficiency another, and an enlargement of the resources now placed at its disposal would then be a safe and expedient speculation. We fear that much money is wasted, and reasonable anticipations of benefit to India sadly disappointed, under existing circumstances.

These remarks have been immediately suggested to us by an article communicated to the Delhi Gazette, regarding the famous Ganges Canal, a work of the most costly description, which has been in progress for a great many years, and from which pecuniary and other results of the highest value to the State and the North-West Provinces were looked for, but which up to the present time has lamentably disappointed the expectations of its projectors and of Government, apparently because of the error and neglect of the engineers concerned:—

"Suppose," says the writer of the article, "we leave the railway for a short time, and return to our old friend the Ganges Canal.

"This venerable institution is, as usual, as sound asleep as ever. The idea of getting water from it in the hot weather and rains being hopeless, it might at least, one would think, supply water for the rubbee crops; even this it does not do.

"There was no water in the main canal till December 1st, and though there is not enough water in it to supply the present area, one or two new large branch canals have been made; for what possible object except making places and jobs, it is impossible to imagine; but even this blunder is far exceeded by another, which will now be described. As is well-known, from some extraordinary theory of the original engineer on the canal, the irrigation feeders were made several feet below the level of the soil, and were sometimes led into jheels for the benefit of duck-shooting. The consequence was that the water had all to be lifted up before it was of any use; this, added to the delays and extortions of the subordinates, prevented the water being of any use to the zemindars.

"This defect of level has at last been forced on the attention of the canal authorities, but instead of remedying this while the canal was shut during October and November, or the rains, when the canal is practically shut, this important work was delayed till now, and at present the irrigation feeders are all closed to make this alteration, and the people have been compelled to resort to wells, and the revenue of this part will be lost."

Assuming the correctness of this representation of the state of the Ganges Canal, which it is only fair to presume would not have been given in the editorial columns of the Delhi paper unless known to be worthy of reliance, it is quite clear that gross inefficiency or gross carelessness, or both together, must be attributed to the responsible parties, for which, however we may take it, they deserve heavily to suffer if still in the pay of the State. Grave faults of the kind above imputed are by no means rare, and are too commonly passed over as matters of course, or at all events too leniently treated, and it is high time that those who are once detected in the commission of them should be deprived of opportunity for their repetition. The Gazette's contributor very justly says that instead of treating the situations in the department of public works or railways as private property, of which men cannot be dispossessed without having some crime proved against them, one and all should be liable to summary dismissal, in the event of proved unfitness for their posts.—Madras Athanæum.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE REVOLVED HILL TRIBES.—We shall be surprised if our warnings as to the policy which the rebel Jynteah and Cossyah tribes would adopt towards the Government should not turn out correct and well founded, and we shall also regret much if it should be successful after all that has been learned of these troublesome savages. We have repeatedly suggested to the Government the necessity of keeping a vigilant watch upon the policy which we foresaw as probable during the cold season and the favourable time for our military operations; reserving themselves for the time when the rains had set in, and the country was no longer traversable by our troops, to recommence their depredations and revive their opposition and rebellion. The latest accounts from the disturbed districts give strong indications of what we forewarned the Government would be the case; for in a recent number of our paper we notified authentically the submission of one of the most important Cossyah or Jynteah villages, with its head man; whilst, a few days after, and upon equally authentic information—part of it telegraphic intelligence furnished by the Government itself—we announced the successful capture by one of our detachments of a leading rebel chief, and, in another direction, an attack upon a British detachment, escorting supplies, by a body of the enemy, attended with some loss on our side. These contrasting occurrences, all taking place in different directions at the same time, have a rather discrepant appearance as part of a steady and determined policy and plan of operations against the rebels, who appear to be again successfully playing their cold-season game of duplicity and submission when they cannot resist, to be succeeded immediately the rains commence by revived mischief and rebellion. The Sylhet and Jynteah districts are, of our entire possessions in India, that portion in which the rains break in earliest and heaviest, attended with terrific storms of thunder and lightning, and a few weeks—we had almost said days—after their commencement, the country is under water, and the higher ground, jungle, and forests, are impracticable for any one but the rebels with whom we have to deal. In these districts the storms and rains will commence early in March; and as yet, in the middle of January, we certainly have not heard anything to lead us to believe that the Cossyah and Jynteah rebellion will be crushed and extinguished by that time. Should it retain its vitality for a few weeks more it has certainly another year to live, with probabilities of an existence still further prolonged. We sincerely hope that this may not be allowed to occur, but that our officers and men employed against the rebels will soon accomplish something which can justify us in a sanguine hope that this rebellion is destined to terminate before the rains and the season of compulsory inaction. The public were justified in expecting that, with plenty of time for deliberate preparation and action, and ample means and resources at its command, the Government would have been able to crush this contemptible and very troublesome rebellion within the present cold season, and bring its leaders to submission or condign punishment. Taken the power, the wealth, the vast means and resources on one side, the ignorance, barbarism, defective weapons, and total want of anything deserving the name of military power or resources on the other, with the fine season for both, and several months in which we can prosecute active hostilities, and we think it must be admitted that disgrace will justly attach somewhere, if, as we fear is probable, the rebellion in question should still be alive and thriving in April next.—Englishman, Jan. 8.

THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF.—We are sorry to say that if we are to accept the information received from quarters usually the most reliable we must look upon the coming event of the present Commander-in-Chief's removal as having cast its very decided shadow before its speedy arrival. It was universally believed in throughout military circles, and in general society at home, for several days before the last mail left England; and it is quite within the bounds of probability that it will be announced in India by the next which shall arrive. For this removal there are, besides the Crawley and Priestley cases, several subsidiary reasons which we need not here enumerate, but which, together with those two prominent scandals, make the recal of Sir Hugh Rose, in the opinion of the home military authorities and of the Government, unavoidable. Regretting sincerely, as we do, the causes which have led to this event, and their consequences to the gallant and distinguished officer now at the head of the army, we cannot see how the Government at home could have adopted any other course of action than recal, consistently with the preservation of strict military discipline and willing subordination throughout the vast army stationed in this important portion of the empire, and with the interests of England in India. As to Sir Hugh Rose's successor in the chief command of H.M.'s forces in India, we believe that if the chances should not change since the last mail left London, Sir R. Airey's appointment to succeed is as good as certain; and we do not believe that the other general officer mentioned in competition with him—Sir W. Mansfield—now Commander-in-Chief in Bombay, ever had a chance of succeeding Sir Hugh Rose, except in the event of the appointment being refused by the Duke of Cambridge's favourites, and going a begging, which is not a very probable occurrence. The Duke may take counsel from Lord Clyde, and may even act upon such counsel, but only up to a certain point; and his putting the appointment of Commander-in-Chief in India into his Lordship's hands and gift, to be bestowed upon any one of his protégés, is very far beyond that point indeed. The day is gone by when India was for the middle classes of England, and the time has come, and will continue, when the favourites and the relatives of the great must be "taken care of" in this country. The Duke of Cambridge must know, as well as we and all other people out here know, Lord Clyde's amiable tendency to push on his own pupils and protégés. But it is by no means improbable that his Royal Highness may think they have had enough; and it is certain that the Duke will not hesitate to set them aside and nominate his own man to the post of Commander-in-Chief in India. Of course we cannot speak of Sir R. Airey's appointment as positively certain; but we have no doubt whatever, from English and Indian information placed at our disposal, that he "was the man for Galway" when the last mail left London, and we can see no reason to anticipate the occurrence of any change in the intentions of the Horse Guards.—Englishman, Jan. 5.

CAPTAIN JONES.—We understand that Captain R. P. Jones, of the Artillery, is in arrest, pending his trial by court-martial on charges arising out of pecuniary defalcations in the estate of the late Lieutenant G. R. Stevenson, of the 4th battery, 14th brigade, Royal Artillery. The matters upon which the charges against Captain Jones are grounded date as far back as August of last year, when Captain Jones was commanding the above-mentioned battery, and his subaltern, Lieutenant Stevenson, was away on sick leave at Nynee Tal, where he afterwards died. Captain Jones's battery is at present at Benares, where he is to be tried; but was at Allahabad when the circumstances which have led to the court-martial took place.—Delhi Gazette.

BEATING MACHINERY FOR INDIGO VATS.—The letter of a recent correspondent inquiring about beating machinery for indigo vats, reminds us that we have forgotten, hitherto, to do justice to an excellent invention; one which every indigo planter within range of a day or two's run to Calcutta will do well to inspect for himself. On the strength of a personal inspection we can assure indigo manufacturers that they will find their advantage in taking some pains at once to satisfy themselves of the merits of this machinery. Mr. Gwyther, the inventor, like many of his sanguine character, brought temporary ruin upon himself by the manner in which he prematurely rushed into the manufacture of costly and untried machines. But he stuck steadily by his conviction of the perfect practicability of his idea; and after many difficulties and much hard work, there is now open to inspection at his works, just at the foot of Hastings-bridge, by the canal side, a pair of full-sized pucca vats fitted up with the patent beaters. All we can say of it will hardly convince those who have not seen it of its admirable efficacy and simplicity. Four men will be able to beat a pair of vats with ease, and with an agitation and perfect exposure of the liquor to the atmosphere which could not be obtained by any care or amount of hand labour. It is so simple that nothing can put it out of order but the deliberate use of a sledge hammer; and Mr. Gwyther can put them up at a cost which would be more than repaid by the saving of wages for beaters alone in the second season. We can have no doubt that when once known the patent beaters will be applied in every factory in India.—Englishman.

THE GREAT EASTERN HOTEL COMPANY.—We have to congratulate all interested upon the very successful result of the first six months' operations. Those (and if we are correctly informed they were not few) who questioned the flourishing condition of this company will be most agreeably surprised to find that a dividend equal to 14 per cent. per annum, exclusive of 2 per cent. set apart to the credit of the next half-year's account, was declared at the meeting held on Saturday last. There is abundant evidence in the report that the directors are energetic, and the manager and secretary indefatigable in the discharge of their respective duties, and shareholders may, we think, look with confidence to gradually increasing dividends and an enhanced value to their property. The speculation gives fair promise of proving successful beyond expectation, and when we bear in mind the fact that the report has reference to a period of the year dull to the extreme in Calcutta, and still warrants a dividend equal to 14 per cent., what may not be expected at the next meeting, after the close of the busy season?—Hurkaru.

GANGES CANAL.—This venerable institution is, as usual, as sound asleep as ever. The idea of getting water from it in the hot weather and rains being hopeless, it might at least, one would think, supply water for the rubber crops; even this it does not do. There was no water in the main canal till December 1st, and though there is not enough water in it to supply the present area, one or two new large branch canals have been made; for what possible object, except making places and jobs, it is impossible to imagine; but even this blunder is far exceeded by another, which will now be described. As is well-known, from some extraordinary theory of the original engineer on the canal, the irrigation feeders were made several feet below the level of the soil, and were sometimes led into jheels for the benefit of duck shooting. The consequence was that the water had all to be lifted up before it was of any use; this, added to the delays and extortions of the subordinates, prevented the water being of any use to the zemindars. This defect of level has at last been forced on the attention of the canal authorities, but instead of remedying this while the canal was shut during October and November, or the rains, when the canal is practically shut, this important work was delayed till now, and at present the irrigation feeders are all closed to make this alteration, and the people have been compelled to resort to wells, and the revenue of this part will be lost.—Delhi Gazette.

SIR HUGH ROSE.—If the report is true, and we have no reason to doubt it, we are afraid Sir Hugh Rose must have been guilty of the indiscretion which is charged against him of having written intemperate letters about the Governor-general to the home Government. On no other hypothesis can we understand his recall being deemed necessary. There is no use, however, in further speculation, we must wait till we hear more. A recall now-a-days by no means signifies the official ruin of a public man. And if Sir Hugh Rose is recalled now, we feel perfectly confident, as we did in Sir Charles Trevelyan's case, that before very long a reaction will take place, people will find out that he has been treated unjustly, and the late Commander-in-Chief and the conqueror of Central India, will find his services once more called for in some important and distinguished post. Should war unhappily break out in Europe and England be involved, there can be little doubt that Sir Hugh Rose would be the man chosen to take command of the army in the field—for as a military commander we have never heard it disputed that he is without a rival. Sir W. Mansfield has been named as his successor; Sir Hope Grant would be a better choice. Indeed, if, as is asserted, one cause of the displeasure of the Horse Guards and home Government is his Excellency's method of dealing with the Mhow court-martial case, we do not see how Sir W. Mansfield can be in favour and Sir Hugh Rose in disgrace, for the two Commanders-in-Chief went hand in hand in this business. However, the whole thing from beginning to end is incomprehensible. England has adopted a habit of treating her public men lately in such an extraordinary manner that we hardly know what to expect, certainly we ought not to be surprised at any eccentricity or vagary. The home Government recall Sir Charles Trevelyan for insubordination and opposition to the Income-tax; they applaud Lord Canning's policy to the skies, and send out Mr. Laing to aid in carrying out that policy. Mr. Laing does so successfully, as far as success could attend a policy of the kind; he goes home and is blamed for having fulfilled the very duty he was sent to accomplish, and subjected to such treatment that he is forced to resign, while Sir Charles Trevelyan is selected to take his post! These political eccentricities in the civil administration have their counterpart in the military, where they make Lord Clyde a Field Marshal, and recall Sir Hugh Rose!—Delhi Gazette.

MISSIONS IN INDIA.—The following interesting statistics concerning missions in India are from tables by Dr. Mullens, published in the Calcutta Christian Observer, for November and December:—

	Bengal.	N.W.P.	Bombay.	Madras.	Total.
Missionaries (European)	113	119	40	146	418
Ditto (Native)	17	11	10	43	81
Catechists	169	118	53	719	1,079
Churches	140	73	37	610	890
Native Christians	20,774	5,301	2,331	90,587	1,18,893
Communicants	4,719	1,488	965	14,080	21,252
Boys in Schools	12,631	10,910	4,006	27,308	54,858
Girls in Schools	1,977	1,598	1,426	9,722	14,723

The following figures show how these statistics compare with those compiled and published by Dr. Mullens in 1852:—

	1852.	1862.
Missionaries ...	363	418
Churches ...	266	890
Communicants ...	14,711	21,252
Native Christians ...	91,295	118,893
Boys in Schools ...	87,062	54,888
Girls in Schools ...	11,193	14,723

According to the rate of advance exhibited by these statistics, the native church might be expected to double itself every twenty-five years; the native Christian body about three times in a century. A good many centuries would elapse before the evangelisation of India, if only this rate should be maintained.

CURIOUS IF TRUE.—A strange move of the French Imperial Government has been communicated to us, which, if truly reported, should suggest some reflections to our Government. It is said that orders have been received at Chandernagore for organising a scheme of education for the younger portion of the French native subjects of that interesting "colony." The scheme is to embrace a purely elementary course of instruction in the French language and literature, which is to be supplemented by a higher course, if the pupil wishes it, in Paris, at one of the public colleges of the metropolis. The expenses of those who are willing to proceed to France are to be borne by the Imperial Government, which undertakes to feed, clothe, and educate them for the moderate return that, on finishing their training, they must serve the Government, in the capacity for which they shall have been educated, for at least three years.—Indian Mirror.

HERAT.—A letter dated from Paris, Nov. 10, has the following passage relating to French feeling on the subject of the Herat business:—"It was lately remarked by the official papers here, that the conflict between Dost Mahomed and the Persian Shah would pass unnoticed in Europe, but that it was virtually a struggle between England and Russia, and should, therefore, be narrowly watched. In fact, the Emperor appears to be extremely apprehensive of the growing importance of India; he looks with dismay at the prospect of its making England independent of America, and of becoming a source of profit and honour instead of one of cost and anxiety. His Majesty feels it necessary to keep a sharp look out upon us. To this end he has created another naval establishment, some ten miles distant from the mouth of the Red Sea, near to Ras Bir in the Gulf of Aden. For the small sum of £2,000 he has induced the Sultan Tajaurao to sell him the port of Eboh, opposite to Macha and Moussah, and there will the French eagles be gathered together. The same journals record with pride and pleasure the certain success of M. de Lesseps' scheme for cutting through the Isthmus of Suez. At last France is to hold the keys of India, and Egypt is to become a French possession. Such is their hope, such their object. It is for us to see that both shall be frustrated."

MEDICAL AMALGAMATION.—Rumours vague and undefined regarding the Medical Amalgamation are beginning to float about again on the surface of society. One of these is to the effect that a certain number, fifteen, we believe, is the number specified, of the seniors of both services are to be forced to retire. It is, we suppose, vain to call attention again to the grievous injustice committed by the refusal to carry into effect the Queen's Warrant. In consequence of this, Queen's Assistant Surgeons in India actually draw less pay than they do in England. We have since writing this received a statement of the case of Queen's Assistant Surgeons, for which we shall, if possible, find room in our next issue.—Delhi Gazette.—We do not believe that any inducement will be held out for the retirement of medical officers. A scheme is now before the Council, which, if carried out, will materially benefit the service.—Ed. A. I. M.

THE CALCUTTA VOLUNTEER RIFLE REGIMENT is making rapid strides, we learn, as regards its organisation, and the movement is certainly regarded with increasing favour by the public. We have heard with much pleasure that the officers of the 5th company have decided on giving three prizes, value Rs. 200 each, which are to be competed for only by those who have been most regular in their attendance at daily drill. This is a step in the right direction, as it evidences a serious determination on the part of our Volunteer officers that the great essential to the making of a soldier—viz., strict attention to drill, shall be a sine qua non in any Volunteer competition for prizes. Here, as everywhere else on British ground, a real Volunteer spirit must engage the hearty sympathies of every Englishman; and we shall be sincerely glad to see our Volunteers overcome the many obstacles which at the outset stood in the way of their success.

GUNS AND AMMUNITION FOR CHINA.—H.M.'s ship Vulcan comes out of dock to-day (January 8), and, having coaled and taken in stores and provisions, will return in a few days to her former ground, the China station. Whilst here the Vulcan has been entering men, both from the mercantile shipping and shore-going, for the squadron in China, and has secured a considerable number of volunteers. The Vulcan also takes round to Shanghai a considerable quantity of ammunition and other military supplies for the British force operating in the North of China, the intended despatch of which we have before noticed. No ship of war has ever left this port carrying with her a better character for her crew, as regards their behaviour on shore, than H.M.'s ship Vulcan. In addition to a large supply of small-arm ammunition, H.M.'s ship Vulcan will take round from Calcutta to China a number of twenty four pounder guns, for employment in the field against the Taepings. As these guns will be chiefly useful for battering purposes, it is to be presumed that their being sent to the scene of hostilities implies the attack, by the allied and imperial forces, of towns and fortified strongholds in the interior. We are, in sooth, getting steadily further and further into this Chinese maze of complications.

FAILURE OF CROPS.—We are sorry to state that letters from the Meerut and neighbouring districts give a gloomy picture of the probable cereal and other agricultural productions in that part of the Upper Provinces, and that fears are entertained of a return of the scarcity which has so recently prevailed, and which it required such energetic action and large excise of benevolence to mitigate. The crops are represented as failing; and the Ganges Canal being dry, causes the worst forebodings as to the future. The corn crop and the sugar cane are in serious danger, if not indeed gone beyond hope of favourable maturity, the fall of rain which usually comes to the assistance of the agricultural peasantry at this season of the year not having favoured the Upper Provinces with its appearance up to date of writing, nor shown any signs of its advent. We would hope that the gloomy forebodings contained in our letters are more darkly coloured than the actual state of affairs warrants; but it appears certain, that under the most favourable circumstances which could now occur, the crops of all kinds in the districts in question must be far below a general average.

RANGOON, Jan. 1.—The Chief Commissioner, Colonel Phayre, starts in about ten days more for Mandalay, to lay before the king the ratification, by the Governor-General, of the treaty signed by his Majesty in November last. Colonel Phayre proceeds in a steamer single handed, i.e., without an attendant flat, and the voyage there and back will not, therefore, exceed a fortnight or three weeks, barring accidents. But though the king's steamer, the Myenantschyah, with a draught of only three feet, voyages easily up and down the Irrawaddy at all seasons of the year, our old tubs, which do not draw less than four and a-half feet, will be very apt to stick at some of the shallows beyond our frontier, with the nature of which of course our navigators are very imperfectly acquainted. On Colonel Phayre's return we may expect to be put in possession of the treaty in extenso; at present we have but a very vague and general knowledge of its principal stipulations. Dr. Williams, of H.M.'s 68th Light Infantry, is to be the first British consular agent at Mandalay. The selection, though perhaps not a happy one, is the best, and indeed the only one which could be made under the circumstances. The field of selection is a very limited one. The post is not of so important or lucrative a nature as to induce any educated man, not a resident of Mandalay, to proceed there for the purpose of taking it up; and of the present European residents of Mandalay, Dr. Williams is the only one at all eligible for the post. The Europeans in the capital are not numerous, and may be counted on the fingers. There are, first, a few Italian and French Roman Catholic Missionaries who would not, and could not, of course, take any office under her Most Gracious Majesty. There is M. D'Avera, a Frenchman of Scottish descent, but of ultra-Gallic tendencies, a soi disant merchant and a correspondent of M. Thouvenel's. He is even now looking forward to the speedy advent of the French legions at Mandalay, not up the Irrawaddy, but via Saigon and the Cambodia River. There are one or two French ouvriers, the relics of D'Orgoni's unfortunate band, who eke out a precarious existence by manufacturing, or pretending to manufacture, steam engines and other machines for the heir apparent. There is Captain Holstead, late of a Madras N.I. regiment, who has, for reasons, resigned her Majesty's service; and lastly, there is Dr. Williams, who proceeded to Burmah Proper about a year ago, in the expectation of making a fortune, which he has probably found to be not quite so easy of accomplishment as he hoped. He has by this time acquired some knowledge of the people and their language, and though he may not possess all the qualifications that may be desirable for the situation, there is positively no one else to whom the Government could offer it. It is stated that the Government have sanctioned the deputation of Dr. Bigaudet, the Roman Catholic Bishop of Pegu, on a semi-official visit to Bawan and the frontiers of China, to ascertain the practicability of opening out the communications with those regions. Dr. Williams will probably be directed to accompany them. The worthy bishop is most thoroughly qualified for the task he has undertaken, and the chances of this mission producing a satisfactory result are greater in his hands than they would be in any one else's. His chief object in accepting the office is probably to open out a communication with the Roman Catholic Mission in Yunan, which, though it has members within a few miles of the Burmese frontier, cannot at present communicate with the rest of the civilised world, except through Peking. Some few months ago you may recollect a letter from the Bishop of Yunan to Bishop Bigaudet on the geography of the country between Mandalay and Gunaw was read before the Asiatic Society, and was afterwards published in their journal. Bishop Bigaudet is much liked, and has much influence at Mandalay, where he has a large flock of Christians (the Burmanized descendants of the Portuguese who once had factories in this country), in whom the king takes considerable interest, and it is probable that an exploratory expedition, conducted by him, would excite less jealousy and meet with more encouragement than one undertaken by a purely British official.

DR. DUFF'S MISSION.—A medical mission is about to be established by Dr. Duff's Mission in Calcutta, under Dr. Robson, who has lately arrived from Scotland. A similar mission has been so successful under Dr. Patterson in Madras as to elicit the acknowledgments of the Madras Government. The United Presbyterian Church have a medical missionary who is meeting with great success in Rajpootanah.—Dr. Valentine. Accompanying a missionary who preaches in the vernacular, the Doctor heals all who come to hear. He speaks of the chief diseases met with as those of the eye and skin, caused simply by dirt. He extracted several teeth, the natives suffering from toothache to a far greater extent than is generally believed. A bunya coolly made this confession to him: "Of course I have used false weights and measures, and told lies to the zemindars. If I did not cheat, I could not live, as every one is trying to cheat me." Cleanliness as well as godliness is at a sad discount in Hindostan.

DECLINE IN THE EXPORT OF PIECE GOODS.—The following figures show how serious has been the decline in the export of English piece goods to India:—

Ten months of 1860	...	£8,728,646
" 1861	...	8,112,348
" 1862	...	7,196,904

Still Indian prices are below those of Manchester, and the wonder is the export is so great. The decline in the whole cotton goods export trade of Great Britain is seen:—

Cotton piece goods, 10 months, 1860	£32,773,758
" " 1861	30,637,703
" " 1862	25,015,892

The total exports in the ten months were:—

Total exports, ten months of 1860	£112,956,527
" " 1861	105,480,242
" " 1862	103,519,269

The total imports were 147½, against 157 millions in the ten months of last year. Corn and cotton flowed in so fast that England will have to pay a good deal of specie. From India alone in the month of September the imports of cotton were:—

1860	...	£668,787
1862	...	2,370,982

Since September there has been a continuous increase in the receipts of this staple; but in the three quarters of 1862 the whole import of cotton was just half of that in 1860, and less than half in 1861, or £14,512,437.

GANGES CANAL.—A correspondent of the Moniteur states that one of the falls in the Ganges Canal twelve miles below Roorkee has given way. The water of the canal had to be run off in consequence, much to the detriment of the crops. It is said that temporary repairs can be effected before Christmas.

MR. WINGMAN.—After a residence of five years in China and Japan, Mr. C. Wingman, the artist of the Illustrated London News, has left the East for England with a portfolio full of sketches. He has resided at Peking, travelled in Japan with Sir B. Alcock, and shared the dangers of one of the attacks on the legation at Yedo.

RELICS OF MAHOMET.—The Lahore Chronicle draws attention to the curious fact that the British Government are the jealous custodians of the pyjamas, hair, shoes, walking-stick, and other relics of Mahomet, which are kept under lock and key in the Fort of Lahore. Timour brought them to India. They descended through the various masters of the Punjab to Ranjeet Singh, who, though a Sikh, professed such veneration for them, that he refused one lakh of rupees offered by the Nawab of Bahawalpore for one of the shoes of the Prophet. He used to keep them in the fort of Mokerian in the Hoshiarpore district. On one occasion the fort caught fire, but the flames could not touch the "Ziarut Shureef." Maharajah Sheer Sing brought them to Lahore, and they passed to the British Government. They should be hung up on the so-called gates of Somnath in the Agra arsenal, as another monument of English folly.

ISTHMUS OF SUZ CANAL.—The Alexandrian correspondent of the Bombay Times of India describes a fête held at Timsah by M. de Lesseps, to inaugurate the flowing of the waters of Lake Menzaleh—or, as the French say, the Mediterranean—into the Timsah basin. The writer is unable to say whether the stream still continues, but we may conclude that ere this a sheet of water has been formed in the centre of the Isthmus. "At Alexandria there is, indeed, not the slightest enthusiasm on the subject. I hear it dismissed by people of all nations with the remark that a narrow and shallow ditch half way across the Isthmus, with a pool of stagnant water at the end, is, after all, but a poor result to show for an expenditure of some three millions sterling."

MAJOR DRURY, who was formerly assistant-resident at Travancore, has caused to be translated from the original Dutch "Letters from Malabar," by Jacob Canter Visscher, who was chaplain at Cochin, in the employment of the Dutch East Indian Company, about 140 years ago. The letters, covering 164 pages, were addressed to his brother in Holland, and he published them in 1743. The Madras Observer says the work is full of curious information on the state of South Western India, and the jealousies of the various European adventurers, Dutch, Portuguese, and English, a century and a half ago. The Dutchman thus describes the English, at a time when they were ousting the Dutch from India:—"The character of the English is, as you are aware, proud, domineering, and selfish, and when combined with a disposition to cruelty, has been the cause of many sad events in India." The work is further enriched by an account of Travancore, and Fra Bartolomeo's travels in that country. Fra Paolino San Bartolomeo was a barefooted Carmelite, who was about thirteen years in India, residing chiefly on the Malabar Coast. His travels were published in the Italian language after his return to Rome, in the year 1796.

SWARM OF LOCUSTS.—A heavy black cloud, fully five miles long, was seen approaching Rawul Pindee from the south-west, on Sunday evening, the 14th instant, which proved to be a swarm of locusts, that settled afterwards to the north of the city. We have heard no further particulars, but from the course indicated we presume the unwelcome visitors propose invading Cashmere, though we fancy from the season they have chosen for the purpose they will meet the fate that befell Napoleon's host on its retreat from Russia.—Lahore Chronicle, Dec. 20.

THE SULTAN ABDUL AZIZ.—There is a rumour that Sultan Abdul Aziz is insane. Instead of cutting down expenditure he has been making the most extravagant presents to his employés, from the gift of £15,000 sterling to Fuad Pasha, down to the gift of £2 each to every soldier of the whole standing army stationed in Constantinople. Instead of having one wife he has fifty. Fuad Pasha is said to be the real ruler for the moment.

CAPTURE OF A MURDERER.—The Oudh Gazette records the capture of another of the mutineer murderers of 1857—Usagar Ali, alias Meer Nawab, who is charged with having been an accomplice in the massacre of the mother, grandmother, uncle, and brother of a Mr. Lightle, a clerk, in Lucknow.

SIR J. LOREN, well-known as guardian of the Maharajah Dhuleep Singh, has agreed to visit India, to conclude with the Government the Tramway Company's compact for light lines of railway, at a total cost, including rolling-stock, of £3,500 a mile. The Nulhattee line, constructed by Mr. Wilson's company, is now well advanced.

THE FOLLOWING RULE passed by the Horse Guards is made applicable to India:—Captains having Brevet rank as field officers, at present holding certain staff situations as pointed out by the 8th clause of the Royal Warrant of the 14th October, 1858, are permitted to count their services in those situations towards the rank of colonel, but no captain holding Brevet rank of field officer, who may in future be appointed to such situations, will be allowed to count his services in them towards the rank of colonel.

SIR HUGH ROSE.—A singular editorial paragraph figures in the Mofussilite of December 23, regarding an alleged serious accident met with by his Excellency Sir Hugh Rose, who is stated at its outset to have broken his thigh, and subsequently to have sustained a dislocation of the hip joint. We feel uncertain whether the writer was in jest or earnest when he wrote, but we suspect the former, from certain mysterious and rather indelicate allusions contained in his article, which prevent our quotation of it.

INDIAN RAILWAYS CAPITAL.—A financial notification recently published at Calcutta states that the net balance standing to the credit of the Indian railway companies at the close of July last was £2,498,451. Of this amount £352,866 is credited to the Bellary capital, and £930,955 to the Great Indian Peninsular Line. The Madras Main Line was under advances, to the small sum of £23,584.

PESHAWUR DIVISIONAL COMMAND.—The delay in filling up the Peshawur divisional command, vacant by the departure of Sir Sydney Cotton for England, has arisen from the entire change in the arrangements which the Government, on the recommendation of the Commander-in-Chief, is about to make as regards the military command in that part of the empire, and along the frontier. We understand that in future there will be two divisional commands, instead of one, on the North-West Frontier—the Peshawur division and the Sind Sagur division; and that the general officers commanding those two divisions will each of them take upon himself also the command of, and responsibility for, a certain portion of the frontier. The Punjab Irregular Force, though it will in future be under the control of the Commander-in-Chief, will not, we understand, be removed from the frontier, except in case of pressing emergency, but will continue, as heretofore, to hold the important chain of posts which it has always occupied with a few trifling changes. General Showers, now commanding the Presidency division, is, we believe, still the favourite for the Peshawur division, if he will accept it; and there are now two other general officers for divisional command, to one of whom, in all probability, the Sind Sagur division will, if constituted, be assigned. We cannot understand the prolonged delay which has taken place in making these arrangements.—Englishman.

AMUSEMENTS.—Calcutta has never been so well supplied with means of amusement at Christmas-tide as on this occasion. Circus, amphitheatres, concerts, the theatre, balls, pic-nics, and fancy fairs abound. The most remarkable event, to the native population, was the ascent of a balloon from the Eden Gardens yesterday evening, 20th Dec. Mr. Johnston was the enterprising proprietor of the balloon, but the pecuniary result must have been very unsatisfactory to him. Instead of asking people to pay to enter the erection from which the balloon rose, whence they could not see it well when in mid-air, he ought to have raised a general subscription in the town for the purpose. Three persons, one a lady, ascended to a height of only a few hundred yards. A drizzling rain and strong wind overhead rendered it advisable for the party to descend speedily. Never before have natives assembled together in so vast a crowd in Calcutta.

ARRIVAL OF SIR CHARLES TREVELYAN.

The mail steamer Nemesis, from Suez, which left Galle on the evening of the 6th inst., reached Madras at about ten o'clock on Thursday morning, with Sir Charles Trevelyan on board. The firing of the guns which announced her arrival was the signal, in accordance with the notification that had been issued beforehand, for the assembly of the gentlemen composing the deputation, as well as of all others interested in witnessing the ceremony. The expectation that the above notice would be numerously responded to was so fully realised that in a very short time not only the landing place, but also the extremity of the pier and the surrounding buildings, were thickly thronged by citizens of all classes of the population. Conspicuous amongst these were the uniforms of the officers of the Volunteer guards, who mustered in full force to receive his Excellency, the landing place being opposite the Custom-house. His Excellency the Governor and other gentlemen went on board the steamer shortly after her arrival, and accompanied Sir Charles ashore. Immediately on landing he proceeded to the office of Messrs. Arbuthnot and Co., where the deputation awaited him. They then advanced in procession to the upper story of the building, where a large hall was arranged for the occasion. Before proceeding to business, Sir Charles was engaged in recognizing and receiving the congratulations of numerous old Madras associates and acquaintances. After a brief interval thus occupied, Mr. W. H. Crake, the chairman of the deputation, having delivered a brief introductory speech, proceeded to read the address; the same which was adopted at the meeting held in the People's Park on the 22nd December; and which appeared in the Athenaeum of the 18th December last; to which his Excellency, who seemed deeply affected, made the following appropriate reply:—

"Gentlemen,—I should indeed be void of sensibility if I were not deeply moved by the hearty welcome you have given me on my return to labour in India, and by the confidence you have expressed in me. Our most precious earthly reward must always be the favourable opinion of those who know us best, and whom we most highly esteem.

"As I have not yet had an opportunity of knowing the wishes of the Governor-general, or opinions of my colleagues in council, you will not expect me to enter upon the financial topics adverted to in your address; but this I may safely say,—that our object will always be to provide, by a vigilant and frugal administration of the finances, the means of relieving taxation where it most presses, of strengthening the establishments for the protection of person and property, and of assisting the development of the resources of the country, and the intellectual and moral well-being of its inhabitants.

"You only do me justice in supposing that the interests of your presidency are dear to me, and that I shall always promote them to the extent of my power. I should be most ungrateful if I could ever forget the loyal support I received from persons of every class when I was more immediately connected with the South of India, or the many pleasant personal associations I then had the happiness to form among you."

Mr. Crake then read the Address from the members of the Chamber of Commerce as beneath:—

"To SIR CHARLES E. TREVELYAN, &c., &c.

"Sir,—I have the honour, by desire of the Chamber of Commerce, to convey to you the congratulations of the mercantile community of this Presidency on your appointment to the high and important office of Finance Minister to the Government of India.

"It is a source of much satisfaction to this Chamber to witness the return to this country of a statesman whose name has been intimately associated with that policy of judicious retrenchment which has so favourably influenced the finances and best interests of India, and this Chamber entertains every confidence that your best efforts will be directed towards the development of the material resources of this empire. We anticipate for our Presidency great advantage from the practical knowledge you have acquired of its capabilities and requirements, and we are confident that any representations which the mercantile interests may have occasion to address to the Supreme Government of India will have your careful and experienced consideration.

"The present is scarcely a fitting occasion to dwell at any length upon matters that press unduly upon our local commerce, but I am desired to draw your attention to some subjects which this Chamber has recently brought under the notice of Government, and to request your support in obtaining the desired reforms.

"1. The present very defective state of the postal arrangements between localities in this Presidency, but more especially between Madras and Bombay, have been frequently represented by this Chamber as a grievance felt by the entire community, and one that is likely to grow in magnitude when Bombay becomes, as it is likely to be, the port for the European mails.

"2. The extension of the telegraph system, and the establishment of a Complaint Office at Madras, are urgently required; and the Chamber has every reason to believe that such improvements have the active support of the local Government.

"3. The present Stamp Act is found to be far too complicated, though it is an improvement upon the previous Indian Acts. The Chamber believes that it would be true policy to reduce the Indian rate on bonds to the level of that raised in Ceylon, and generally to simplify the Act.

"4. We entertain an earnest hope that the condition of the country's finance will, at no distant date, enable the Government to deal with the Income-tax and Tariff with a view to their reduction, whilst we consider that a wise and liberal expenditure on public works is urgently called for, more especially in connection with the increased cultivation of cotton.

"5. The existing prohibition to the cultivation of opium in this Presidency is felt to be undesirable, and we urge that this restriction be removed.

"6. This Chamber trusts that the use of the public deposits may be greatly extended, and the circulation of the currency notes legalised and promoted throughout the Presidency.

"In conclusion, I am desired to wish you success in the arduous work you have undertaken, and to express a hope that your health may permit you for a long period to direct the finances, and otherwise assist in the Government of this empire, the welfare of which you have sought to promote for upwards of thirty years, and in whose future prosperity your services will be always gratefully remembered.—I have the honour to remain sir, your obedient servant,

"W. H. CRAKE, Chairman."

His Excellency briefly replied by saying that he felt extremely thankful to the gentlemen of that deputation, for the expression of confidence which had just been read. In doing so, he would also pray they should not be over-confident, nor expect too much. Sincerely as he might feel the interest of their cause, we were all more or less liable to errors of judgment, and had all to contend with obstacles of various kinds in furthering our intentions. In speaking to those gentlemen, he felt that he was addressing a body whose sphere of duty was vastly similar to that of the Government itself, namely, to protect the interests of commerce, by wise laws and regulations; to give greater scope to its operation, by removing the restrictions which encumbered it; and to facilitate its advantages by constructing canals, extending railways, forming good metalled roads, regulating the currency, and improving banking accommodation.

All these were their mutual objects. He did not suppose that the Government could regard the interests of commerce in exactly the same point of view as themselves, because those interests were certainly of more immediate advantage to the latter. But Government had nevertheless good cause to foster and promote commercial interests, because the administration of the country was thereby materially benefited. There were other public departments devolving upon the attention of the Government, viz., the Military, the Police, the Judicial, and he might also include his own, the Revenue Department; whereas the Chamber of Commerce being more especially interested in commercial affairs, were therefore more competent to deal with its concerns. The Government would therefore be very short-sighted indeed did it not avail itself of the chamber's advice in all important matters connected with commercial business. These were the only observations he had to make, and he would again express the gratitude he felt at this kind reception.

MISCELLANEOUS.

OOTACAMUND PRISON.—The only prison for Europeans in India is that at Ootacamund. The local journal says there are thirty-six men in it, who work at tailoring, shoe-making, mat-making and carpentry, materials for other occupations being required before the prisoners are set to them. There have been only two cases of misconduct among the men. This is due to the labours of the Bible-women when the majority of the prisoners were in Calcutta. On men like Freeman, who was once under sentence of death, and Hawkins, the notorious burglar, a wonderful change has been wrought.

NEW STEAM SHIP COMPANY.—The Madras Examiner mentions the establishment of the Madras and Colombo Steam Ship Company for the purpose of running steamers between Madras, Colombo and the intermediate ports. The proposed capital is £25,000, in 2,500 shares of £10 each. The successful application of local capital to local purposes is only beginning in India, and will do much to create a network of both sea and land transit.

AN EAST INDIAN ASSOCIATION has been formed at Madras, whose designed objects are—first, to watch over the interests of the East Indian community, and to adopt such measures as may be most conducive to the furtherance of their interests; and second, to co-operate with other societies, associations, or meetings in furtherance of objects tending to the public good of the people of the country at large. In Bombay, where the European element is more extensive, and East Indians are modest servants and respectful subordinates, one never hears of the "community" holding meetings for agitation as to their individual rights and interests; but in Madras, where the East Indians are rising in wealth and social position, they very foolishly make themselves ridiculous in the eyes of Europeans by fussing about after privileges and favours to which they have no claim. They are constantly riling in the local press, and taking offence in every-day life against being treated as in any way unequal to the Britisher, and yet with a stupid inconsistency they form associations and hold meetings for the purpose of insulating themselves from both natives and white people. They ape the European in their habits and customs; they patronise carte de visite albums, and exchange mementoes; they are weak on coal scuttle bonnets and peg-top trousers; and they diligently cultivate mustachios and beards, or strain the hair back a la Empereur, according to their sex; yet they are constantly reminding us that they are not Europeans, and that they require special representation, and apparently peculiar legislation. Of course one cannot talk to a dark gentleman and think of him as a London cockney; but when all notice of colour and parentage is evaded the East Indians do themselves a wrong by reminding us of their individuality. The real object of this association is generally said to be to induce Government to admit one of their number into the Legislative Council. They urge that as the Europeans and natives are represented they should be also—a foolish argument, so long as they claim to be of the former and disavow the latter origin. There are several estimable men among the "community," shrewd, sensible, and much respected, and these are wisely content to let the subject of caste alone, and to satisfy themselves with the intimate friendship of Europeans; but some others, moving in good position and ambitious, are not so moderate, and make themselves contemptible by claiming honours which Government are never likely to confer. The rising generation of East Indians, benefited, as they should be, by their training in Great Britain, and allied, as they probably will be, to European families, will found such claims upon better arguments than actuate the present race of inexperienced, ill-educated, small-minded, though possibly wealthy, men.—Times of India.

BOMBAY.

ABOLITION OF THE INDIAN NAVY.

It is very generally known in the community that a despatch reached the Bombay Government by the last mail from her Majesty's Secretary of State for India relating to the abolition of her Majesty's Indian navy. The despatch might be entitled, "The Eschatology of the Indian navy, by Sir Charles Wood." It is dated the 28th Nov. last. There will be a little delay in the publication of it, as it is believed that the copy intended for the Governor-general will not reach its destination until the arrival at Calcutta of the mail that has just left Galle. The old Indian navy, then, after long years of arduous and glorious service, is at last to be abolished. The pensions of its present officers have been already noticed, but not fully stated. We may add that senior captains will receive a pension of £550 per annum; junior captains, £500 per annum; senior commanders will receive a pension of £450 per annum; junior commanders, £400 per annum. Commanders are to retire as captains. First twenty-four lieutenants will receive pensions of £300 per annum, and to retire with rank of commander; next twenty-four lieutenants pensions of £250 per annum, and remaining twenty of £200 per annum. All pursers will receive pensions of £300 per annum. With the above scale the retiring pension of £800 per annum, held out to captains of more than thirty years' service, ceases; but should captains or commanders elect for the hope of the £800, those thus electing will receive £50 per annum less than the scale now offered.

With the abolition of the Indian navy there is to be a "Bombay marine" composed of transports. The present gunboats will be retained for police duties. Bengal is also to have a similar marine. Madras is not to be so favoured. The Bengal and Bombay marines, as local services, are to be in no way connected, but are to be under the orders of their respective Governments. Officers who elect to join the Bombay marine will not receive the retiring pension to which they may be entitled on the abolition of the navy, until their services under Government shall have ceased. There will be no pension for the Bombay marine, which will be strictly a civil service. The Bombay dockyard is to be retained, but with a reduced establishment. These are the only particulars which we are at present in a position to lay before our readers; but we have no doubt that in the course of a fortnight the despatch itself will be published, and the eschatology of the Indian navy will be thoroughly understood by all interested in the subject. Meanwhile, the particulars which we have now given may enable some of the officers of the navy to take time by the forelock, and to be ready on the publication of the despatch to decide at once on the course which they will adopt. We shall refrain from any comments on the despatch until it is before the public. It is not to be expected, if we judge from what has befallen the Indian army, that the Indian navy will be abolished without injury to the interests of some connected with it. We trust for the honor of Government that such injuries will be as few and as slight as possible. The service has been a hard-working and an ill paid one. It has produced distinguished officers in every department of a naval service—as navigators, warriors, surveyors, diplomatists. It deserves well of its Queen and country, and we trust it will receive what it has so well merited.—Bombay Gazette.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE BOMBAY BAR.—The only two members of the bar that we can think of at the present moment (says the Bombay Gazette) who hold offices worth mentioning under the Government are the Director of Public Instruction and the First Judge of the Small Cause Court. Only two or three months ago the Bombay bar was made up as follows:—

PLACE HOLDERS.
Mr. Lewis.....	Advocate-general.
Mr. Westropp	Legal Remembrancer.
Mr. Bayley ...	Clerk of the Legislative Council.
Mr. White.....	Clerk of the Crown.
Dr. Reid	Coroner and two Law Professorships.
Mr. Crawford	Chief Magistrate.
Mr. Hore	1st Judge of Small Cause Court and Law Professors.
Mr. Taylor ...	Master in Equity and other offices.
Mr. Howard	Director of Public Instruction.

BARRISTERS UNPROVIDED FOR.

Mr. R. B. Barton.
Mr. Dunbar.
Mr. Scobie.
Mr. Green.
Mr. Connon.

Thus out of a total of fourteen men not fewer than nine were holding office, either in the Supreme Court or out of it, two or three months ago; and the only changes that have since occurred are that Mr. Bayley has resigned his appointment, and Mr. Crawford gone on leave. But, then, we are told that but two of these officers are "worth mentioning." Well, people's ideas differ upon nothing more widely than upon a point like this. Let us see, then, what these nine place-holders of the local bar are drawing from the State. From the table of pay and allowances we find their emoluments to be as follows:—

Mr. Lewis.....	£2,160 per annum.
Mr. Westropp ...	630 plus fees.
Mr. Bayley	1,560 plus fees.
Mr. White.....	600 plus fees.
Dr. Reid.....	1,140.
Mr. Crawford ...	3,000.
Mr. Hore	3,360 (new scale).
Mr. Taylor	4,000 (estimate).
Mr. Howard	3,330.

These nine gentlemen were thus dividing annually between themselves about £20,000 of public money, or an average of £2,200 a year each. The Bombay Gazette is not alone in regarding the less valuable of these offices as not "worth mentioning," Mr. Bayley having thrown up his £1,560 a year with the utmost indifference a few days ago—the work being too hard for the pay, we presume, although it required but a portion of the learned gentleman's time. We do not, nor does any man, object to the preferment of really able men from the Indian bar; but matters have come to this pass, that these gentlemen think themselves hardly dealt with if the mere possession of wig and gown does not place them in some office or other under Government.—Times of India, Dec. 29.

DESIGNATION OF FOREST OFFICERS.

Public Works Dept., Dec. 30.—No. 5,122.—Resolution.—The Gov. gen. in Council having had under consideration the present designation of forest officers in British Burmah, thinks it advisable that it should be changed from superintendent or deputy superintendent to conservator or deputy conservator of forests, the latter term being more expressive of the intentions of Govt. with reference to the management of the forests. These designations will be generally adopted henceforth in Provinces under the control of the Govt. of India.

No. 220.—In furtherance of the above orders the following will be the designations of the officers of the forest dept. in British Burmah:—

POLICE OFFICERS' ALLOWANCES OUDE AND BURMAH.

Financial Dept.—No. 20g.—Extract from the proceedings of the Govt. of India, in the Financial Department, dated Jan. 3, 1863.

Read again the underment. papers regarding the grant of deputation allowance to actg. police officers in Oude and British Burmah:—

Letter from offic. civil paymaster, Fort William, No. 7, dated May 20, 1862.

Letter from offic. civil paymaster, Fort William, No. 3,883, dated June 11, 1862.

Extract home dept., No. 2,497, dated May 17, 1862.

Order, No. 3,860, issued from this department on June 5, 1862.

Letter from the honorary secy. to the committee of secretaries, dated July 19, 1862.

Resolution, No. 628g, passed in this department on Sept. 30, 1862.

Read endorsement from the home department, No. 4,504, dated Aug. 25, 1862, forwarding, for favourable consideration, a recommendation from the chief commissioner of British Burmah, that a superint. of police, acting for another in a higher grade, may be permitted to draw deputation allowance.

Resolution.—The rule which, in those departments of administration where appointments of the same class and title are sub-divided into grades of different rank and pay, prohibits the grant of deputation allowance to an officer acting in a higher grade of his own class was originally introduced, H.E. the Gov. gen. in Council observes, to meet the cases of dep. and asst. comsurns. in non-regulation provinces, and, in the absence of any special rule, it has been hitherto made applicable to dist. superints. and asst. superints. of police. But, considering the superior salaries and prospects of dep. and asst. comsurns., and the hardships which generally attend the application of the class rule to police officers, H.E. in Council is pleased to decide that all superints. and asst. superints. of police, when acting in higher grades of the class to which they may in their substantive appointments belong, shall receive deputation allowance.

2. In continuation of this subject, H.E. in Council is hereby pleased to direct that in all presidencies and provinces to which Act V. of 1861 has been extended, the same rule of limitation shall be observed, which, by resolution dated Sept. 30 last, was laid down for Oude, viz., that the allowances of an asst. superint. of police acting for a superint. shall in no case be allowed to exceed the salary of a superint. of the lowest grade.

No. 628g.—Resolution dated Sept. 30, 1862:—

The Chief Commissioner of Oude represents that, when an asst. superintendent of district police in that province is appointed to officiate for a superintendent of the 1st or 2nd grade, he sometimes draws, under existing rules, a deputation allowance which raises his total emoluments above those of 3rd or 4th grade superintendents.

H.E. the Gov. gen. in Council observes that, as the grades of salaries in the Oude Police are personal, not local, an asst. superintendent on his first promotion to a superintendency would receive no more than the salary attached to the lowest grade. To allow him to draw a higher salary when only officiating as superintendent would be anomalous, and would place the permanent superintendents in lower grades in a disadvantageous position.

H.E. in Council is therefore pleased to direct that the allowances of an asst. superintendent of police in Oude, appd. to officiate as superintendent, shall not exceed the salary attached to the lowest grade of superintendent.

No. 21g.—From the Hon. E. Drummond, Secy. to Govt. of India, Financial Dept., to the Officiating Civil Paymaster, N.W.P.:—

Fort William, Council Chamber, Jan. 3, 1863.—Financial Dept.—Sir, I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, No. 215-95, of Aug. 25, 1862, submitting for decision the question of the allowances of Lieuts. E. M. and H. T. Woodcock, who are acting as superintendents of police in Oude, and inquiring whether the rule under which, when appointments are divided and subdivided into classes and grades, an officer acting in a higher grade of his own class is refused deputation allowance, should be maintained in the cases of a military officer officiating for another, and entitled to acting allowances or full pay under military rules.

In reply, I am desired to inform you that the cases of Lieuts. E. M. and H. T. Woodcock are met by the resolutions noted in the margin [No. 628g, Sept. 30, 1862; No. 20g, Jan. 3, 1863], and to observe that the class rule to which you refer is intended to supersede the military regulations in all cases except those of police officers, to which, under the orders above mentioned, the rule does not apply.—I have, &c., E. DRUMMOND,

Sec. to the Govt. of India.

No. 3g.—Ordered, that the foregoing letter be published in the Government Gazette for general information, and that copies thereof be forwarded to the foreign and home depts.; Govts. of Bengal, Madras, Bombay, N.W. Provs., and Punjab; Civil Paymasters, Bengal, Madras, Bombay, and Punjab.

Military Dept., Jan. 5.—No. 9.—With reference to the notification issued by the Govt. of N.W. Provs., No. 3,408a, Dec. 27, 1862, the services of Asst. surg. E. F. Wheatley, Bombay medical estab., civil asst. surg. of Lullutpore, are placed at disposal of Govt. of Bombay.

No. 10.—The undermentioned officers are permitted to proceed to Europe on leave of absence, on m.c.:—

LOSS OF THE SHIP "LOODIANAH."

Dec. 9.—No. 5,725.—The following despatch from the Right Hon. the Secretary of State for India, with enclosure, is published for general information:—

From the Right Hon. Sir Charles Wood, Bart, M.P. and c.n., H.M.'s Secy. of State for India, to H.E. the Right Hon. the Gov. gen. of India in Council.—(No. 47, dated London, Sept. 24, 1862.)

My Lord,—I forward to you, herewith, for your information and guidance, a copy of a letter [dated Sept. 4, 1862] from the Board of Trade, having reference to a report of inquiry held at Bombay relative to the abandonment at sea of the ship Loodianah, and drawing my attention to an Act passed in the last session of Parliament, some of the provisions of which materially bear upon the powers and the proceedings of courts of inquiry held in the British possessions abroad to investigate the causes of wrecks, or the conduct of masters and mates and engineers in the merchant service.

2. I also forward to you a copy of this Act, entitled "The Merchant Shipping Act Amendment Act, 1862."

3. I have to direct your special attention to the fact pointed out in the letter from the Board of Trade that it is essential that any report of an investigation held in India under the Merchant Acts should not only receive, but bear the formal confirmation in writing of the Governor or person administering the Government of the Presidency where the Court is held; and I have further to request that you will impress upon the marine authorities of your Presidency the necessity of a rigid compliance with the provisions of the Act of Parliament, and with the instructions communicated in the letter from the Board of Trade referred to in this despatch.

From J. Booth, Esq., to the Under-Secy. of State for India, India Office, (No. 9,534, dated Whitehall, Sept. 4, 1862.)

Sir,—I am directed by the Lords of the Committee of Privy Council for Trade to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 26th ult., transmitting extract of a letter from the Government of Bombay, enclosing copies of a report and proceedings of a court of inquiry held at the police office, Bombay, to investigate the circumstances connected with the abandonment of the ship Loodianah at sea.

I am to acquaint you that a copy of the report will be forwarded for the information of the owners of the above ship.

My Lords take this opportunity of directing the attention of Secretary Sir Charles Wood to an Act that was passed late in the last session of Parliament, some of the provisions of which materially bear upon the powers and the proceedings of courts of inquiry held in the British possessions abroad to investigate the causes of wrecks, or the conduct of masters, and mates, and engineers in the merchant service.

I transmit herewith six copies of the Merchant Shipping Act Amendment Act 1862.

It appears to my Lords that it is very important that the earliest opportunity should be taken to direct the attention of the Govts. of the several presidencies and dependencies in India to the provisions of the 23rd section of this Act, which gives to courts of inquiry the power which, until the passing of the Act, was exercised exclusively by the Board of Trade of cancelling or suspending the certificates of masters and mates; also to section 24, which gives the court a power which they did not previously possess of demanding the delivery to them of a certificate pending the trial of the offender.

My Lords would suggest that the Secy. of State should, in making known those provisions to the authorities in India, particularly impress upon them the necessity of a rigid compliance with the requirements of para. 6 of the 23rd section of the Act, and should also point out that it is essential that any report of an investigation held in India or the dependencies should not only receive, but bear the formal confirmation in writing of the Governor or person administering the Government of the presidency or dependency where the court is held.

This formality is rendered necessary by the 5th provision in section 242 of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854.

It is hardly necessary to observe that, unless it is in future shown upon the face of any report of inquiry into wrecks, or into the conduct of officers in the merchant service, that the requirements above referred to have been strictly observed, it will not be in the power of this board to withhold a certificate that may have been cancelled or suspended abroad, and the intention of the Act will be frustrated.

My Lords think it right to observe, with reference to the preceding remarks, that the report of inquiry in the case of the Loodianah is not formally confirmed by the Government, and the evidence, which is not in original, is not certified as a true copy, and it would not have been in the power of this board, had the occasion required it, to cancel or suspend the certificate of the master or mate; those officers must have escaped punishment owing to the informality of the proceedings.

I am to add that there are other provisions in the accompanying Act relating to merchant seamen which will form the subject of a further communication for the guidance of shipping masters in H.M.'s British possessions abroad.

E. H. LUSHINGTON,
Secy. to the Govt. of Bengal.

2. Candidates for admission must be qualified by acquaintance with their military duties, and by having passed the prescribed examination in the native language for charge of a company.

3. The aggregate number of officers to be admitted to the class will be fixed by the C. in C., with reference to the requirements of the public service and (in communication with the principal) to the accommodation and means of instruction available at the college. For the present the number has been limited to ten.

4. The number of students from each regiment at the same time will be restricted to two, captains or subalterns.

5. Applications from officers should be submitted through the prescribed channel for his Excellency's orders.

6. The classes will usually be formed on the 1st January and 1st August of each year, as convenient dates for the college, and the course of study will vary from three to five months. On the present occasion the class will be formed on the 20th January, 1863.

7. All students will be non-resident.

8. All students will be required to pay a monthly fee of Rs. 16

9. Students will be required to provide themselves with field books, and any other articles for their use that the principal of the college may consider requisite.

10. Officers who obtain permission to join the survey class will be considered "absent on duty," and will be so reported in the monthly returns.

Capt. R. A. Clementson, staff corps, is appointed to act as 2nd asst. adjt. gen. of the army from this date until further orders.

Capt. J. H. G. Trist, of the Eur. veterans, is permitted to reside and draw his pay at Bangalore and the Neilgherries, until further orders.

The Victoria Cross.

WAR OFFICE, Feb. 6.

The Queen has been graciously pleased to signify her intention to confer the decoration of the Victoria Cross on the undermentioned seaman of the Royal navy, whose claim to the same has been submitted for her Majesty's approval, for his gallant conduct at the capture of Fung-wha, in China, as recorded against his name, viz.: George Hinckley, able seaman of her Majesty's sloop Sphinx, for volunteering, while under the east gate of the city of Fung-wha, to carry to a joss house, one hundred and fifty yards distant, under a heavy and continuous fire of musketry, gingalls, and stink-pots, Mr. Coker, master's assistant of the Sphinx, who had been wounded in the advance to the gate; in which object Hinckley succeeded. On his return to the gate, under a similar fire, he again volunteered, and succeeded in carrying to the joss house Mr. Bremen, an officer of Ward's force, who had been also wounded in the advance on the gate; and he again returned to his post under the gate.

Official Papers.

YIELD OF THE PRESENT COTTON CROP.

From G. W. M. Batteh, Esq., Secretary to the Sudder Board of Revenue, North-West Provinces, to J. D. Sandford, Esq., B.A., Officiating Secretary to the Government of the North-West Provinces, dated Allahabad, Dec. 19, 1862.

As promised in paragraph 15 of my address, No. 771, dated Oct. 18 last, I have now the honour, by direction of the Sudder Board of Revenue, North-West Provinces, to submit a report upon the yield of the present cotton crop.

2. In the districts north of Meerut it was about one-fourth below the average. Farther down the crop was better, the loss being about a tenth, or at most an eighth; this applies to Meerut, Boolundshuhur, and Allygurh. Throughout the Lower Doab the outturn has been fair, in some places even above the average.

3. Upon the whole the expectations expressed in paragraph 14 of the Board's last address have been fully realised in respect of the districts lying to the north of the Jumna; and the increased area then reported as having been sown with cotton may, in respect of that tract of country, be held to indicate the degree in which the supply for the present year has increased. The quality, however, will probably be found inferior, since, as before explained, the first pickings, which are the finest, were, to a great extent, lost.

4. The Board regret that they have a much more unfavourable report to give of the produce in the districts south of the Jumna. In Muttra and Agra, which contain an area under cotton of nearly 200,000 acres, the failure has been lamentably great. Mr. H. D. Robertson states, that in the former district "not half the usual quantity per acre has been secured, and that of a very inferior quality."

5. Similarly in Jaloun, Major Ternan estimates the yield per acre this year to be only 11 or 12 seers instead of 30. In Jhansie, where the crop is reported somewhat better, the loss is supposed to be about 25 per cent.; further east, again, in the direction of Banda, the outturn is probably not much above 50 per cent of the average year.

6. The Board fear from the reports they have received that in Gwalior and the independent States of Bundelkhand the crop has likewise been much below the average.

7. As regards price, the market rates per maund have varied during the last two months from 14 rupees in the western districts to above 21 in the eastern. The following table will show how great the fluctuations have been in the chief markets:—

RATE PER MAUND.

	31st October.	30th November.
Meerut ...	14 8 9	13 4 6
Allygurh ...	14 8 0	14 12 0
Agra ...	18 0 0	15 0 0
Furruckabad ...	21 0 0	14 8 0
Mirzapore ...	16 0 0	16 0 0
Ghazeepore ...	21 4 0	21 4 0

8. The exportation of cotton from these provinces continues unabated; every effort is strained by the speculators to carry the present crops to Calcutta at the earliest moment. Carriage of every description is pressed into the traffic; the roads are thronged by carts laden with cotton destined for Calcutta or some of the intermediate stations. To such an extent, indeed, has capital been invested, and carriage engaged in the trade, that customary branches of merchandise have been neglected, and the transport of salt eastward interfered with. The salt revenue has lately received an unexpected check not unreasonably attributed to this cause.

9. The cotton trade is also beginning to take unexpected routes. The senior member was startled by meeting on the Grand Trunk Road a line of carts laden with perhaps 500 maunds of cotton moving westwards from Allygurh, and bound for Umritsur. It appears that this is the first occasion on which cotton has been consigned from these provinces to the Punjab for many years, and it is now carried by that route with the view of eventual exportation from Kurrahee. From one mart, Hatrass, it has been reported that about 12,000 maunds have already been despatched to Puttiala and Umritsur, as against 14,000 from Mirzapore. The route must, therefore, have been found a promising one.

10. Mr. Muir was also surprised by meeting on the Grand Trunk Road a long string of camels, each bearing two bales, or six maunds of cotton, and bound for Indore. Agents from Bombay have been busy in Agra and the adjoining districts making cotton investments, and a considerable amount is believed to be now taken in that direction, attracted, no doubt, by that portion of the railway already constructed from Bombay towards Central India.

11. The following rates of carriage from Hatrass will show the comparative cost of the various routes:—

	Rs.	A.	P.
Hatrass to Umritsur ...	1	0	0 per maund
" " Puttiala ...	0	13	4 "
" " Mirzapore ...	0	10	8 "
" " Calcutta ...	2	5	4 "

But the pressure of the present demand, and the great competition for carriage, are no doubt raising the cost daily above these rates.

12. It is satisfactory to find that the despatches from Agra by the railway are on the decrease. Since September the figures are as follows:—

	Maunds.
October ...	20,950
November ...	45,433
December, 1st week ...	8,439
	74,822

To which, if we add the quantity reported in my last letter, we have 1,12,500 maunds (above 80,000 cwt.) in about half a-year.

This is independent of the large and constant traffic by country boats and carts.

13. During the last two months about thirty thousand maunds are reported by Captain Bird to have been shipped for Calcutta by steamer, and the remainder by country boats; but the demand for freight is at present so great that carts are now engaged to go all the way to Calcutta.

14. Palmer and Co. have commenced working their screws at Cawnpore, and are reported to be preparing others at Agra; but Captain Bird states the number of screwed bales that have yet arrived here to be small. The increased value of cotton has, however, begun to show itself in the more secure and careful manner in which the bales are packed and covered.

15. Captain Bird's screws at the Jumna Ghat here will be in working order in a few weeks.

16. A copy of this address has been forwarded in continuation to the Chamber of Commerce.

THE NEW MARRIAGE LAW.

THE new Marriage Law in India makes a wedding between Native Christians a very cheap and simple business. As Native Christians are often scattered over the country at great distances from clergymen, or even the regularly-appointed registrars, Mr. Harrington's New Bill permits any persons not in orders and only licensed for the occasion to grant certificates of marriage between Native Christians who make a simple affirmation and promise in their presence. The male, however, must be sixteen or more years of age, and the female at least thirteen, at which ages the Hindoos are, generally speaking, physically marriageable. The certificate costs only four annas, and ratifies a marriage "good and valid to all intents and purposes." No preliminary notice of such marriage is needed before the grant of the certificate, no religious ceremony is requisite, nor is the consent of parents or guardians insisted upon—no questions are asked—no security is demanded against fraud and deception—no obstacles of any sort are thrown in the way of a consummation so devoutly to be wished. The Local Government seems determined to give every possible inducement and facility to early marriages amongst Native Christians, and to make the process far cheaper and more simple and easy than the old Gretna-Green system in Scotland.

CANAL FROM THE HOOGLY TO BALASORE.

WE have just seen a copy of the contract which has been executed by the Governor-general of India and the East India Irrigation and Canal Company in London for the construction of a scheme of works in Orissa and the adjacent districts towards Calcutta. The Government of India is said to be most anxious to expedite the proceedings of this company, which promises to confer very great advantages on the scene of its operations. These operations will include a canal from the Hooghly to Balasore, a length of nearly a hundred miles. The introduction of salt from Liverpool into India is said to have broken up the manufacture of it at Balasore, and thereby increased the ready supply of labour on the canal. The Government reserves to itself the right of purchasing the works of the company after twenty years and six months, but if there should be any dispute as to their real value it is to be referred to arbitration, and if the arbitrators cannot agree, they are to appoint an umpire, and if he should refuse to act the Chief Justice of Her Majesty's High Court in Bengal is to appoint another, whose decision is to be final. This is said to be the first instance in which clauses of arbitration have been introduced into a contract between the Indian Government and a private company.

THE HARBOUR OF SEDASHEGUR.

IN the House of Commons on Monday last Lord Stanley asked the Secretary of State for India what progress had been made in the construction of the pier and the improvement of the harbour of Sedashegur, and in the opening of the roads from the cotton districts thereto. Before the question was answered Mr. Kennard asked for the papers respecting the Bengal Army, for which he had applied in 1861. Sir Charles Wood quietly got rid of the second question first, by saying, according to the Times report, that "he was afraid he must ask Mr. Kennard to repeat the question," and according to the Daily Telegraph report, that "with respect to the papers referred to, sufficient time had not elapsed to present them in proper form." We confess this second excuse does not speak much for the rapidity of clerical performances in Victoria-street, Westminster. We are rather surprised that Mr. Kennard, after waiting since 1861, took the postponement of the answer in 1863 so very quietly. Perhaps he was struck dumb with wonder or bewilderment. In reply to Lord Stanley, Sir Charles Wood furnished a far more satisfactory reply, as far as his own justification was concerned, though everyone will regret to hear that the unexpected delay in the completion of the pier and the improvements of the harbour at Sedashegur was occasioned by an extraordinary amount of sickness amongst the workmen. Sir Charles Wood's first favourable account of the progress of the work was founded on a letter from Dr. Forbes, of Darwah; but he has since received from Colonel Kennedy, superintending engineer of the Southern Circuit, a despatch, dated September 30th, which gives a lamentable statement of the causes of delay in the works alluded to. Of 2,000 men employed on them, 900 were disabled by sickness, several died, and the rest cleared off the work in forty-eight hours, carrying with them reports which deterred the advance of others who were on their way to the pier. "Men cannot and will not work," says Colonel Kennedy, "when suffering from disease, nor will they consent to remain to die." Until the malaria abates which has produced the fatal fever under which the workmen have suffered, there can be no hope of collecting a sufficient number of them to complete the undertaking. It was expected, however, that in spite of all obstacles, the absolutely essential and immediate requirements of the port would be supplied by March or April next. Sir Charles Wood said he had not the least objection to lay on the table the whole of the correspondence on the subject, and if Lord Stanley would move for the papers on an early day they should be granted as an unopposed return.

YOUNG BENGAL.

THERE has been an émeute in the Medical College of Calcutta, which is very characteristic of Young Bengal. It appears that Dr. Norman Chevers, principal of the college, finding that one of the students had been detected in the act of stealing quinine while compounding medicine for the patients, had him conveyed to the police-court, where, on conviction of the charge against him, he was sentenced to be imprisoned in the House of Correction. Ten days after this "A Native of Bengal," under the signature of "D. N. L."—probably one of the students—writes a long and violent letter to the papers, in which, while he accuses Dr. Chevers of "detestable acts," of "ill-conduct to the Bengalee class students of the college," of "abusing those young gentlemen with such bad expressions which a gentleman feels ashamed to utter even in chastising a common cooly of the bazaar," and of applying the coarsest and most indecent Hindostanee epithets to a student who "happened to make a mistake in dressing a patient, which was pardonable in him, as this was committed only from his not having understood fully what was told him by the principal in English," the Bengalee class students, adds the letter writer, being imperfectly instructed in the language of their Professors. Dr. Chevers publishes a reply to these charges, and avers that they are "a tissue of gross falsehoods, put together by some designing persons who are urging these poor lads to rebel against the just and always moderately-exercised authority of their teachers." The doctor attributes the general discontent of the students to the fact of the committal of one of their body to the House of Correction. Whatever may have been the cause, it is clear that very serious offence was taken by all the students, who left the college in a body in a state of extreme irritation, and at a great sacrifice to their professional prospects. Whether the authorities have condescended to coax them back again, or have made a searching and impartial inquiry respecting their alleged grievances, we cannot say, but the latter course, we think, would be the most dignified and proper, though it is pretty clear that, whatever may have been the provocation, the students have laid themselves open to censure for rushing into so violent an extreme without first trying whether a moderate and respectful appeal to the highest local authorities would not have secured them fair play or some satisfactory redress.

The character of these native students is very peculiar. Generally speaking, their affections are very easily won by their European instructors, and they are disposed rather to overrate their kindness and the benefits received from them, and to carry their respect into something like idolatry or hero-worship, than to discover their imperfections or to disobey their orders. They are in most cases far more docile than boys of the same age in England. But then, again, they are apt to regard themselves as having arrived at manhood before they are out of their teens, and this is partly occasioned by the fact that many an individual amongst them, before the dawn is on his cheek, is in possession of a wife and child. They cannot, therefore, be treated quite so freely in the way of punishment and rebuke as schoolboys in other countries. They are singularly vain and sensitive, and, to use Burke's expressive phrase, "feel a stain like a wound." It would be absurdly incorrect to attribute this character to old Bengal, or to the Natives generally. "Sensibility of principle" or "chastity of honour" cannot be regarded as the national trait of the people of any part of Lower

India. But the youths of Bengal who have familiarised themselves with the literature of England, and the sentiments of their English teachers and friends, though often extravagantly self-conceited, and sometimes most childishly romantic, have yet felt the divine contagion of a superior moral atmosphere, and are both in heart and mind incomparably superior to the mass of their own countrymen. They have indeed little or no true manliness of character, little or no real courage, moral or physical; but in all intellectual exercises they are both acute and subtle, and pursue their studies with such unaffected love and delight and such easy and triumphant success as would seem perfectly marvellous in the eyes of a schoolmaster at home. They are conscious of this precocious intellectual power—indeed over-conscious of it—and the great consideration which they receive from Government, and all the British magnates in India, tends directly to foster and exaggerate the evil. In a commendable spirit of partiality the authorities of our Indian colleges and schools recognise no distinctions of rank or caste in the students, and though this has a wholesome effect in one way it has a contrary effect in another. If it checks the offensive hauteur of aristocrats, it encourages upstart vanity in the humbler classes, so that we find the lads whose parents are in the meanest possible condition, and who have often to associate in their own homes with the dregs of society, amazingly thin-skinned with respect to their pretensions to gentility. The son of a very poor and low caste man at a Government school would be frightfully shocked if not treated as a gentleman, and a single word from his teacher that would imply, however delicately or distantly, that his real condition precluded him from the right to that designation would almost drive him mad. We can easily understand, therefore, how Dr. Chevers, a clever and well-meaning man, though, we believe, not a very experienced instructor of the natives, first, by a public and most humiliating punishment of a member of the Bengalee class, and secondly by a word or two of indignant or contemptuous rebuke which might have seemed to be of more general application than was intended, may have touched upon some of the sorest places in the character of Young Bengal, and have thus excited a commotion that fairly took him by surprise. But we cannot believe for a moment that he really applied to any student of the college the shocking Hindoostanee Billingsgate which the anonymous newspaper epistle writer has attributed to him, and which he has so publicly and indignantly denied.

BOOKS.

British Influence in India: An Essay on the Influence which the British Government has Exercised on the Material Prosperity of that Country. By Francis Cotterell Hodgson, B.A., Fellow of King's College, Cambridge, and Pitt University Scholar. London and Cambridge: Macmillan and Co. 1863.

The Rev. C. W. Le Bas, M.A., was connected for thirty years with the East India College at Haileybury. His old pupils raised a fund for perpetuating the memory of his services, and this they presented to the University of Cambridge to provide for an annual prize for the best English essay on some subject connected with the history, institutions, and prospects of our Anglo-Indian empire. The Essay before us is the Le Bas prize-essay for 1862. Mr. Hodgson has divided his Essay into four parts. First, the general introduction; secondly, the subject of the Indian revenue; thirdly, the administration of justice; and fourthly, the construction of public works. The Essay presents, upon the whole, a highly favourable view of the results of British connection with the East; but we are far from feeling satisfied that other European Powers, jealous of our triumphs in that quarter of the globe, or even perfectly impartial moralists and politicians of any country, would always arrive at a decision quite so flattering to us. The prevailing tone, in fact, of the Essay is couleur de rose, and John Bull will find it well adapted to encourage his national self-esteem, and to salve any slight wounds of conscience occasioned by the misdeeds of some of his least virtuous representatives in Hindostan. For our own part, we cannot pretend to think that England has not much to be ashamed of or much to grieve for with respect to her proceedings in the East; but then, again, it is quite as certain that in the history of English conquests and English rule in India she has much reason for honest pride and exultation. The old charge against us, that we have done nothing for India, if we have done much for ourselves, and that if we were suddenly turned out of Hindoostan we should leave no permanent memorial of our rule, has now lost all its original truth and force. Several of our Governors-General—amongst them Lord William Bentinck and Lord Dalhousie—took a personal and anxious part in the prosecution of public works, and earnestly encouraged every attempt to increase the comforts and elevate the intellectual condition of the people. There is now in India a noble system of public instruction, and the effects upon the native mind of the literature and science of the West, communicated by the numerous Government colleges and by the private schools, liberally aided by the State, can never, we think, be wholly eradicated or lost by any political revolution. Millions upon millions have been spent upon roads, canals, railways, and electric telegraphs, and we cannot believe that the natives, on our quitting their land, would desire to destroy these tokens of a high state of civilisation. Both the intellectual and the material progress of India during the last fifty years have been much greater than our home countrymen generally are at all aware of, and it is quite certain that we are at last beginning to impress upon the native mind the fact that we are not now disposed, in our government of a hundred and eighty millions of people, to confine our attention to the interests of a few thousands of their foreign rulers. Such, indeed, is the anxious eagerness of the British authorities both in India and at home to do strict justice to the natives, that the indigo planters and other British settlers complain, whether rightly or wrongly, that the justice is one-sided—that, in fact, there is too strong a reaction in favour of the natives, who are now benefited at the expense of the British in India, and that we are making the same mistake towards the natives generally which we fell into with respect to the Sepoy army—that we are flattering and pampering them into rather too high an opinion of their own importance. Be this as it may, it is at least an error on the right side—an indication of right feeling—of a generous sense of the great moral responsibility we have incurred in taking possession of so vast a country, and of the sovereignty of so large a portion of the human race.

This little work does credit to the author or compiler, for it comprises within very narrow limits a great quantity of useful information, and places the main facts of the history of India under English rule in so clear a light, that it is calculated to give the reader a better general idea of what we have done and are doing in the East than many volumes upon the same subject of greater bulk and loftier pretensions.

MISCELLANEOUS.

INDIAN ADDRESSES TO THE PRINCE OF WALES.—(India-office, Feb. 9.)—The Secretary of State for India has laid before her Majesty and the Prince of Wales addresses from the residents at Bancoorah, on the occasion of his Royal Highness attaining his majority. The Queen and Prince have been pleased graciously to receive the same.

DRAFTS ON INDIA.—The biddings for 60,000,000 rupees in bills on India took place on the 4th inst. at the Bank of England. The proportions allotted were: to Calcutta, 34,50,000 rupees; to Bombay, 24,00,000 rupees; and to Madras, 1,50,000 rupees. The declared minimum price was as before, viz., 1s. 11½d. per rupee on Calcutta, and 2s. on Bombay and Madras. The applications within the limits were for about 170 lacs. Tenders on Calcutta at 1s. 11½d. will receive about 78 per cent., and above that price in full; on Bombay at 2s. will receive about 10 per cent., and above that price in full; on Madras at 2s. will receive in full.

INDIAN NAVY.—We (Home News) have been informed that Sir Charles Wood has recommended the question of pensions to the captain's clerks of the Indian navy, and that he has resolved to graduate the scale of pensions for that class of officers according to their standing at the date of its abolition under the despatch to the Government of India of Nov. 29, 1862. By this graduated scale the pensions of some of the captains' clerks will be increased from £60 to £80 per annum from the above date.

BREACH OF CONTRACTS (INDIA) BILL.—An address was presented to Sir Charles Wood on Tuesday by the Earl of Shaftesbury, the Hon. A. Kinnaid, and many other gentlemen, thanking him for his despatch to the Government of India on the draft of the proposed law of contracts for that country. In their address the gentlemen by whom it is signed offer their earnest thanks for the instructions given to the Government of India in the despatch referred to, and deprecate the proposed law of contracts as injurious to the best interests of India, and contrary to sound principle. The proposed Draft Act is described as being specially designed to protect the present system of advances to the cultivator upon his crops, and is peculiarly open to this objection, that it has a direct tendency to foster and perpetuate a system acknowledged by all to be, as now carried on, one of the greatest impediments to the expansion of a natural and healthy commerce in India. And should this law be passed, it must retard indefinitely the introduction of a better and more legitimate system. The report of the Bengal Indigo Commission is alluded to as affording indisputable proof that where the two contracting parties are a planter and a ryot the latter can scarcely ever be said to be a free agent; and, under such circumstances, the contract will be one unduly in favour of the party who has the power to compel the other to enter into an agreement. In conclusion, the memorialists express an earnest hope that Sir Charles Wood will not be induced, by any considerations of temporary advantage, to swerve from the great principles enunciated in his recent despatch; and that contracts between individuals shall be left in India, as in all civilised countries, exclusively to the ordinary civil jurisdiction and process. The address was signed, among others, by the Earl of Shaftesbury, Lord Rayleigh, the Earl of Dalhousie, the Marquis of Cholmondeley, the Earl of Darnley, the Earl of Cavan, Lord Ebury, Lord Kinnaid, the Earl of Gainsborough, the Bishops of Ripon and Winchester, Colonel Sykes, M.P., Mr. Robert Hanbury, M.P., Mr. J. Tollemache, M.P., Mr. J. Watt Briscoe, M.P., Mr. E. Buxton, M.P., Mr. Angerstein, M.P., Mr. T. W. Evans, M.P., Mr. C.

Moody, M.P., Mr. C. Baylin, M.P., Lord A. Churchill, M.P., Sir Morton Peto, M.P., and upwards of one hundred other gentlemen, representing the views of various classes of the community.

AFFAIRS IN JAPAN.—A correspondence respecting affairs in Japan was yesterday presented to both Houses of Parliament. It includes despatches from Earl Cowley, Mr. Alcock, Earl Russell, the Japanese envoys, Lord Napier, Sir A. Buchanan, Lord A. Loftus, Colonel Neale, and Admiral Ruper, together with correspondence with the Japanese Ministers relating to the murder of Mr. Richardson, and other outrages on British subjects in Japan. Colonel Neale, writing to Earl Russell, October 29, states the measures taken by the Japanese Government to avert the recurrence of similar outrages. "Fifteen guardhouses, containing five well-armed men, were (he says) established along the portion of the high road frequented by foreigners; and I am assured that in the course of two months a new road, diverging from that which is now generally used, will be completed, upon which Daimios and their retinues will pass to and from Jeddo until they are beyond the reach of all collision." He adds, in reference to the resolution of the Tycoon's Government to relieve the Daimios from their attendance at court in Jeddo, that "a principal result of these measures, constituting a radical change in the oldest institutions of the present dynasty, will be that from 200,000 to 300,000 two-sworded retainers of Daimios will evacuate Jeddo—a class from among which has arisen every personal outrage or injury which has hitherto occurred to foreigners in Japan."

SPECIE TO THE EAST.—The Ellora, which left to-day, took £85,220 in gold to Alexandria, £60 to Suez, and £12,500 in gold and £371,550 in silver to Bombay, making a total remittance of £440,330.

FIRE! THIEVES!! FIRE!!!
C. H. GRIFFITHS having purchased nearly all the best quality of Fire-proof Safes from the International Exhibition of 1862, including those made by Messrs. Perry, Chatwood, Rhodes, and other eminent makers, is enabled to offer them at half the original cost. The patented improvements of the latter maker render it an impossibility for fire to take any effect under any circumstances of time and place. In consequence of the increasing demand for these essential and valuable repositories, which no house of business, or, indeed, private house (where plate, books, and documents are kept) should be without, in these hazardous and dangerous times, C. H. G. has taken additional premises, 3, Pentonville-road, opposite the Angel, Islington, where he also intends to keep a variety of Second-hand Safes by those eminent large makers, Milner, Price, Mordan, &c., at half the price of new. Sketches, with prices, free by post.
Old-change, St. Paul's, London; and opposite the Angel, Islington.

MESSRS. WM. H. ALLEN AND CO.'S PUBLICATIONS.

AN INQUIRY into the THEORIES of HISTORY.—CHANCE, LAW, WILL, with Special Reference to the Principles of the Positive Philosophy. 8vo. cloth, 18s.

"This is both an able and an interesting book; for the writer, while an accurate and in some respects an original thinker, has also the command of a clear and animated style. The general scope of the book is the refutation of that naked positivism of which M. Comte is the apostle. . . . Of the whole work we can confidently say that it is one to be read by every man interested in these questions. It is a weighty treatise, and an important contribution to philosophy."—The Press, August 16, 1862.

"Written to combat certain opinions which have lately been gaining ground with some classes of thinkers, this treatise is well-timed. With no more boldness than is proper, the author claims that the views of wise men in former ages shall not be disregarded without good reason, and that nothing new and improved shall be accepted simply because of its impudence. His own language throughout is moderate and logical. A Conservative on principle, it is a part of his conservative belief in the steady progress of mankind to seek for the development of new thoughts in every age of human history, and ready to accept all that bears the stamp of truth. In a book full of argument, and occupying just that border-land of metaphysics which is harder to tread than the defined circle of metaphysics itself, it would be easy to discover discrepancies of thought and contradictions of terms; but the faults are few, and the merits many."—Examiner, Aug. 16, 1862.

A SHORT TRIP in HUNGARY and TRANSYLVANIA in the SPRING of 1862. By Professor D. T. ANSTED. Post 8vo., cloth, 8s. 6d.

"Professor Ansted's descriptions are written with a neatness attesting the accuracy of a scientific observer's eyes. His volume is one both of value and entertainment: a book calculated to turn the thoughts of tourists down the Danube."—Athenæum, Aug. 16, 1862.

"Many a tourist this autumn will have cause to thank Professor Ansted for introducing them to a new and comparatively unknown country. . . . It would be difficult to find a more agreeable companion for a tour than the author of this interesting volume."—The Press, Aug. 9, 1862.

MEMORABLE EVENTS of MODERN HISTORY. By J. G. EDGAR. Author of the "Boys'hood of Great Men," &c., &c. With Illustrations. Post 8vo., cloth, 6s. 6d.

"A practical writer, with a high sense of his obligations as an instructor of children. Mr. J. G. Edgar never makes a contribution to juvenile literature that does not deserve a certain measure of commendation. We can conscientiously recommend it ('Memorable Events') as a work at the same time entertaining and useful."—Athenæum, March 6, 1862.

"Mr. Edgar's style is clear, vigorous, simple, and unaffected, and from the first page to the last the reader is instinctively conscious of standing in the presence of a gentleman and a scholar. Though writing for the benefit of the rising generation Mr. Edgar possesses the enviable talent of attracting at the same time the attention of young men and grey-beards, and of so describing events as to suggest many a topic for grave reflection. His last ('Memorable Events') is certainly not his least work, and not only confirms but enhances his previous reputation as an earnest, agreeable, high-minded, and reliable chronicler of human achievements and human follies and failures."—Spectator.

"A most acceptable present for the youth of both sexes."—Observer.

By HUGH CLIGHORN, M.D., F.L.S., Conservator of Forests, Madras Presidency. Post 8vo., with Illustrations, price 12s.

"Full of valuable information and thoroughly reliable in all its statements."—Daily News.

THE HISTORY of CHESS: from the Time of the Early Invention of the Game in India till the Period of its Establishment in Western and Central Europe. By DUNCAN FORBES, LL.D., 8vo., cloth, 15s.

"This volume will be a welcome addition to the library of every lover of the noble game of chess. Our author makes a stout fight for the Hindus as the inventors of the game, and adduces many cogent proofs in support of his opinion. He shows how the game is played in other countries, how it has been modified both in the names of the pieces and the names of the game by the peculiarities of the country or the national temperament of the inhabitants; and then traces the steps by which it has arrived at its present place of honour in civilised and intellectual Europe. The book is, therefore, full of curious lore that lean on other and higher subjects than chess-playing, for it involves dissertations on ethnology, comparative zoology, the dispersion and settlement of nations, and the manners and customs of different countries, to a degree that would not be at all anticipated by a person who contented himself by reading the title-page. All this information is given, not in any dry, repulsive, or even technical style, but easily, clearly, and in an animated manner—the style that would naturally be adopted by a gentleman and man of the world."—Herald.

SIN: its Causes and Consequences. An Attempt to Investigate the Origin, Nature, Extent, and Results of Moral Evil. A Series of Lent Lectures. By the Rev. HENRY CHRISTMAS, M.A., F.R.S. Post 8vo., cloth, 6s. 6d.

"These lectures are learned, eloquent, and earnest, and though they approach the 'limits of religious thought,' they do not transgress those limits; and they present the reader with a comprehensive review, based upon revelation, of the nature, extent, and consequences of moral evil or sin, both in this world and in the world to come."—Civil Service Gazette.

A COURSE of ELEMENTARY MATHEMATICS, for the Use of Candidates for Admission into either of the Military Colleges; of Applicants for Appointments in the Home or Indian Civil Service; and of Mathematical Students generally. 2nd Edition. In one closely printed 8vo. volume. Pp. 648. Price 12s.

"In the work before us he has digested a complete Elementary Course by aid of his long experience as a teacher and a writer; and he has produced a very useful book. . . . Mr. Young has not allowed his own tastes to rule the distribution, but has adjusted his parts with the skill of a veteran."—Athenæum, March 9, 1861.

"Mr. Young is well-known as the author of undoubtedly the best treatise on the 'Theory of Equations' which is to be found in our language—a treatise distinguished by originality of thought, great learning, and admirable perspicuity. Nor are these qualities wanting in the work which we are reviewing. . . . Considering the difficulty of the task which Mr. Young has undertaken to discharge, and the extent of useful knowledge he has succeeded in imparting accurately and lucidly in so small a compass, we can without hesitation commend this work to the public as by far the best elementary course of mathematics in our language."—The London Review, April 6, 1861.

THE RUSSIANS AT HOME: Unpolitical

Sketches, showing what Newspapers they read; what Theatres they frequent; and how they Eat, Drink, and Enjoy themselves; with other matter relating chiefly to Literature, Music, and to Places of Historical and Religious Interest in and about Moscow. By SUTHERLAND EDWARDS, Esq. 2nd Edition, with Illustrations. Price 10s. 6d.

"It is a book that we can sincerely recommend, not only to those who are desirous of abundant and reliable information respecting the social economy of the Russian people, but to those who seek an entertaining volume, that may be perused in any part with both profit and amusement."—Edinburgh Evening Courant.

"This is not only one of the most amusing books that we have read for a long time, but also the best and most reliable account of Russian life and manners which has hitherto been given to the public."—Spectator.

"The tone is so genial the descriptions are so vigorously touched, and the author's perfect acquaintance with his subject is so marked throughout, that his sketches are sure to delight any one into whose hands they may fall."—Literary Gazette.

THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY of MISS COR-

NELIA KNIGHT, Lady Companion to the Princess Charlotte of Wales, with Extracts from her Journals and Anecdote Books. Fourth Edition, 2 vols., 8vo., cloth, £1. 6s.

"Why we should turn to these volumes as among the most interesting of the recent season, will be sufficiently evident as we indicate their contents."—Times.

"Of the popularity of these volumes, on account of their historical as well as gossiping merits, there can be no doubt whatever."—Athenæum.

THE HISTORY of the OPERA, from

MONTEBERDE to DONIZETTI. By SUTHERLAND EDWARDS. Second Edition, 2 vols., 8vo., cloth, price £1. 1s.

"Completely master of his subject, and possessing a ready and pleasing pen, Mr. Edwards in these volumes gives us an exceedingly interesting history of operatic performances."—Herald.

"It is one of those treasures of amusing anecdote that may be taken up and laid down at a minute's notice."—Times.

THE REPUBLIC of FOOLS: being the History of the State and People of Abdera in Thrace. Translated from the German of C. M. von Wieland. By the Rev. H. CHRISTMAS. 2 vols., post 8vo., cloth, 18s.

"As a prose satire, 'The History of the Abderites' yields only in breadth of humour, and pungency of wit, to Dean Swift's immortal travels of Captain Lemuel Gulliver, and of works of that class we know of none in any language that can compare with either of the two."—Observer.

"Here is enjoyment for many a Christmas to come, for many thousands of English boys, and many thousands of English men and women. Unfortunately for the world Piazistratus Caxton departed this life without having made any contribution towards the great history of human folly, save, indeed, by the records of his own. Mr. Christmas has given us something even better in his translation of Wieland's Abderites: and in the simplest, most racy, and vernacular English, has enriched our literature with another character of the family dear to mankind, of the Quixotes, Gullivers, and other human foils of human self-love and vanity. If the addition to our shelves of a book to delight the young and instruct the old overflowing with wit, fun, drollery, inexpressible wisdom, depth, and knowledge is an achievement deserving of national thanks, we undertake to convey our share to Mr. Christmas, fearing only lest we should not have thanked him sufficiently."—London Review.

"This Manual, which is approved by the Commander-in-Chief, is portable in form, and should be in the hands of all soldiers and riflemen."—Athenæum.

Baggage collected and shipped at a through charge. Insurances effected. Files of the latest news in the reading-room.

OVERLAND ROUTE.—COMMUNICA-

TION BY STEAM TO INDIA, AUSTRALIA, &c. via Egypt.—The PENINSULAR and ORIENTAL STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY BOOK PASSENGERS and RECEIVE CARGO and PARCELS at their London Office for GIBRALTAR, MALTA, EGYPT, ADEN, CEYLON, MADRAS, CALCUTTA, the STRAITS, and CHINA, by their Steamers leaving Southampton on the 4th and 20th of every month. For GIBRALTAR, MALTA, EGYPT, ADEN, and BOMBAY, by those of the 12th and 27th of each month, and for MAURITIUS, REUNION, KING GEORGE'S SOUND, MELBOURNE, and SYDNEY, by the Steamers leaving Southampton on the 20th of every month.

For further Particulars apply at the Company's Offices, 129, Leadenhall-street, London, E.C.; or Oriental-place, Southampton.

OVERLAND ROUTE FROM MARSEILLES

TO INDIA AND CHINA.—Services Maritimes des Messageries Impériales.—On the 19th of every month a FRENCH MAIL-STEAMER will be despatched from MARSEILLES at Two P.M. for ALEXANDRIA, corresponding with another steamer from Suez to India and China. Passengers and cargo will be received for Messina, Alexandria, Aden, Point de Galle (Ceylon), Pondicherry, Madras, Calcutta, Singapore, Saigon, Hong Kong, and Shanghai.

For passage, freight, and information, apply to B. W. and H. HORN, 4, Moorgate-street, London, E.C.; G. H. FLETCHER and Co., Liverpool; and at Rue Notre Dame des Victoires, Paris; 1, Place Royale, Marseilles; 36, Quai de Bacalan, Bordeaux.

CALCUTTA, calling at the CAPE OF GOOD HOPE and MADRAS.

STEAM COMMUNICATION between LONDON and INDIA, by the MAGNIFICENT FLEET of STEAMERS belonging to the EAST INDIA and LONDON SHIPPING COMPANY (Limited).

The well-known Clipper Auxiliary Steam-ship HYDASPES, 2,249 tons, 300-horse power, G. H. FORSTER, Commander, now loading in the Victoria (London) Docks, will leave on the 18th of FEBRUARY, embarking passengers at and leaving Gravesend on the 20th of FEBRUARY, for CALCUTTA, calling at the CAPE OF GOOD HOPE and MADRAS. This magnificent Ship, built expressly for the Indian trade, has been thoroughly refitted, has first-rate accommodation for passengers, and will carry an experienced Surgeon, also a Stewardess.

The average passage of the last seven steamers has been seventy-two days three hours to Madras; the Hydaspes performed the voyage in sixty-five days, and the last, the Calcutta, in fifty-nine days, being the shortest on record.

For freight or passage apply to GRINDLAY and Co., 55, Parliament-street, S.W.; the Broker, ALFRED BRETT and Co., 150, Leadenhall-street, E.C.; or at the Offices of the Company, 9, Mining-lane, London, E.C., where also applications for appointments as Midshipmen in this service should be made.

CONVEYANCE OF PARCELS to or from

INDIA.—The ORIENTAL INLAND STEAM COMPANY (Limited) undertakes to CONVEY PARCELS between ENGLAND and the principal places in the INTERIOR of INDIA. The Company's vessels ply on the Ganges, between Calcutta and Allahabad; and on the Indus and Sutlej, between Kurachee, Multan, and Ferozepore; taking goods also for the Upper Indus, in correspondence with the new line of the Punjab Government. The Company carries at through rates, by road and railway, as well as by river.—For tariff of charges apply at the Oriental Inland Steam Company's Office, 9, Bulwer-street, London.

MR. HOWARD, Surgeon-Dentist, 52, Fleet-street, has introduced an entirely new description of ARTIFICIAL TEETH, fixed without springs, wires, or ligatures. They so perfectly resemble the natural teeth as not to be distinguished from the originals by the closest observer. They will never change colour or decay, and will be found superior to any teeth ever before used. This method does not require the extraction of roots, or any painful operation, will support and preserve teeth that are loose, and is guaranteed to restore articulation and mastication. Decayed teeth stopped, and rendered sound and useful in mastication. 52, Fleet-street. At home from Ten till Five.

THE BEAUTIES of the EAST.—All that can preserve and enhance the charms of woman, youth, and beauty.—Madame RACHEL begs leave to inform the nobility, aristocracy, and her lady patrons that she has just received a costly consignment of ARABIAN PREPARATIONS, which render the hair, teeth, and complexion beautiful beyond comparison; and the choicest Arabian perfumes—fac simile of which was presented in golden vases by the ladies of Paris to the Empress Eugénie, and have gained for her the patronage of royalty.—Can be selected at, or forwarded from, her Drawing-room Saloon, 47a, New Bond-street.

CHILDREN'S WORM TABLETS

Prepared and sold in Tins of various sizes by THOMAS KEATING, Chemist, &c., 79, St. Paul's Churchyard, London, E.C., and Retail by all Druggists and Patent Medicine Vendors in the World.

Observe the words "KEATING'S WORM TABLETS" are engraved on the Government Stamp of each Tin, without which none are genuine.

CORYZINE.—This invaluable, non-sternu-tative POWDER, employed like Snuff, affords instantaneous relief in incipient cases of cold, influenza or Coryza, the sense of suffocation with excessive secretion supervening, being in both cases effectually removed. To those subject to this distressing complaint it is confidently recommended as a sure remedy.

Sold in Boxes at 1s. 1d. and 2s. 9d.; post free, 1s. 3d. and 3s. 1d. in stamps, by MARSHALL and MELLIN, English and Foreign Chemists, 16, Tichborne-street, opposite the County Fire Office, Regent-street.

RUPTURES.—BY ROYAL LETTERS PATENT.

is allowed by upwards of two hundred medical gentlemen to be the most effective invention in the curative treatment of HERNIA. The use of a steel spring, so hurtful in its effects, is here avoided, a soft bandage being worn round the body, while the requisite resisting power is supplied by the MOC-MAIN PAD and PATENT LEVER, fitting with so much ease and closeness that it cannot be detected, and may be worn during sleep. A descriptive circular may be had, and the Truss (which cannot fail to fit) forwarded by post, on the circumference of the body two inches below the hips being sent to the manufacturer.

Mr. JOHN WHITE, 228, Piccadilly, London.

Price of a Single Truss—16s., 21s., 26s. 6d., and 31s. 6d.

Postage 1s.

Double Truss—31s. 6d., 42s., and 52s. 6d.

Cashmere ditto.	Morissal Sauce.
Tamarind ditto.	Bamboo Pickle.
Pickled Mangoes.	Guava Jelly.
Curry Powder.	Mango Jelly.
Curry Paste.	Pine Apple Preserve.
Cayenne Pepper.	Preserved Mangoes.
Pickled Limes.	Mulligatawny Paste.

Agents for the sale of their Condiments required in the large provincial towns of England and Scotland, and the Australian Colonies. Priced Lists sent free on application.

PAYNE and Co., Belatee Bungalow, Calcutta; Established in 1821.

To prevent spurious imitations, please to observe that the words "KEATING'S COUGH LOZENGES" are engraved on the Government Stamp of each Box, without which none are genuine.

KEATING'S COUGH LOZENGES.

JUDGED BY THE IMMENSE DEMAND,

this UNIVERSAL REMEDY now stands the first in public favour and confidence; this result has been acquired by the test of fifty years' experience. These Lozenges may be found on sale in every British Colony, and throughout India and China they have been highly esteemed wherever introduced. For COUGHS, ASTHMA, and all affections of the Throat and Chest, they are the most agreeable and efficacious remedy.

Prepared and sold in Boxes, Tins, and Bottles of various sizes by THOMAS KEATING, Chemist, &c., 79, St. Paul's Churchyard, London. Sold retail by all Druggists and Patent Medicine Vendors in the World.

SARSAPARILLA.

WILKINSON'S (late BRIDGE'S)

ESSENCE OF FLUID EXTRACT OF RED JAMAICA SARSAPARILLA is appreciated for its Purity, and marked superiority, daily prescribed by the Faculty for Impurities of the Blood, Affections of the Liver, Constitutional Debility, Attenuation of Body, as an Alternative Medicine at the Changes of the Seasons, and for freeing the system from the effects of Mercury.

In India and the Colonies it is extensively used to prevent taking complaints incidental to Tropical Climates, and as a renovator of the system after Sickness is invaluable.

"A superior preparation, that may always be relied on."—Sir Astley Cooper.

"We are in every respect satisfied with it."—Lancet.

"We recommend your Sarsaparilla as the best."—Medica Review.

Laterally, in consequence of much debility, &c., subsequent to Cholera, I have freely used 'Bridge's Sarsaparilla' myself, with complete benefit and success."—J. Poet, F.R.C.S.

Sold in pints, half-pints, and quarter pints. One pint is equal to eight pints of the ordinary preparations.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.—The public are cautioned against cheap preparations of Sarsaparilla, which, instead of being what they profess, are nothing but a decoction of common herbs, sweetened with molasses, and flavoured with American Winter Green. The genuine has "Thos. Wilkinson (late Bridge and Co.), 270, Regent-street, London," engraved on each bottle.

AGREEABLE SEIDLITZ POWDER in one bottle, protected by a case with measure and spoon included. This preparation is highly recommended, not only as a Mild Aperient, but to allay Fever, Throat, &c.

AROMATIC TINCTURE of QUINIDINE for the prevention of Fever, Intermittent or Remittent Ague, and other effects of Malaria. No person exposed to the influences of or predisposing cause of Fevers should be without it, for if taken in small doses daily the system will become so thoroughly impregnated with its principles as to be rendered proof against all attacks of Contagion or Malaria. Sold in pints, half-pints, and quarter-pints.

The above articles prepared only by Thos. Wilkinson (late Wilkinson, Bridge, & Co.), 270, Regent-street, London, W.

PRICHARD'S AROMATIC STEEL PILLS

stand unequalled for restoring vigour to weak and relaxed constitutions, and have been proved to be the best medicine ever offered to the public. To those who are suffering from languor and exhaustion occasioned by a residence in hot climates, these Pills will be found particularly beneficial. They give energy to the muscles and nerves, strength to the stomach, and completely renovate the system, so that the patient is astonished at the effects produced.

Prepared by W. PRICHARD, Apothecary, 65, Charing-cross, London. In boxes 1s. 1d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. May be had of all Medicine Vendors.

OINTMENT AND PILLS.—THROAT AFFEC-

TIONS.—In all cases of relaxed, inflamed, and ulcerated throats, safety may always be secured by rubbing Holloway's Ointment upon the glands under the lower jaw. Its curative powers may be accepted without doubt or distrust. In Diphtheria the most marked success has attended its use, in cases where the disease threatened to run a fatal course in spite of the ordinary treatment. The application of Holloway's Ointment fits it well for children's ailments, where internal medicines can with difficulty be administered. When Pills cannot be swallowed without pain they should be reduced to a powder, and used conjointly with the Ointment, whose cooling, soothing, and healing action they augment by their purifying power.

Now ready, price 6s., or by post, 6s. 6d.,

AND

ROBERT GORDON LATHAM, M.A., M.D., F.R.S., &c.

The Illustrations drawn on Wood expressly for the Work, by PAUL J. NAPTEL, Member of the London Society of Painters in Water Colours.

"The 'Channel Islands' is an excellent book of its class—well conceived, well written, well illustrated, well printed. It is the produce of many hands, and every hand a good one. Nearly every thing which a man can desire to know about Jersey, Guernsey, Alderney, and Sark—about their history, Geography, and natural history—Professor Ansted and Dr. Latham have contrived to tell. Altogether the contents of the volume are as varied and interesting as a well-sustained drama; and to this drama no more graceful and picturesque scenery could have been furnished than we find in the illustrations so profusely given by artists worthy of the subject and equal to their worth—Paul Nappell and M. Peters Le Lièvre. The result is not a merely handsome volume of the old 'Keepsake' style, made to sell and be looked at, but a book of rare merit and value, made for instruction and delight, to be read with pleasure and to be referred to with profit."—Athenaeum, Nov. 15, 1862.

MAILS TO INDIA.

Mails to India and China, via Marseilles, are despatched from London as follows, viz.:—Those for Bombay packets, on the evening of the 3rd and 18th of each month; and those for Calcutta packets (including mails for Ceylon, Madras, and China), on the evenings of the 10th and 26th of each month. When any of these dates falls on a Sunday, the mails are made up on the following evening.

Letters and Newspapers can be forwarded to any part of India, via Bombay and Marseilles, and in most cases will reach their destination some days sooner than if despatched by the following Calcutta mail. The Bombay mails via Southampton, however, are no longer available for the transmission of Letters or Newspapers to the Madras Presidency.

Mails for the Mediterranean and all parts of India and China, except the Bombay Presidency, are despatched via Southampton on the mornings of the 4th and 20th, or, when either of these dates falls on Sunday, upon the previous evening.

Mails for the Mediterranean, the Presidency of Bombay, and Upper or North-West Provinces of Bengal and China, are despatched via Southampton, on the 12th and 27th of the month, except when these dates fall on Sunday, in which case they are forwarded on the previous evening.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE Governor-General was to leave Calcutta for Benares on his way to Simla on the 3rd of this month. He was to hold durbars at Benares, Agra, Delhi, and Umballa. His lordship, it was supposed, would not be absent from Bengal more than a year and a half at most, and, in fact, we can hardly expect that he should remain away so long, for something is pretty sure to occur to summon him back to Calcutta before the end of that period. He is expected to be at Agra about the 8th of this month, and it is supposed he will remain a week there. Sir Robert Napier, as acting President of the Council, in the absence of the Governor-General, will be the Burrah adme, or great potentate of the Presidency, and as he is singularly courteous and urbane, and is not very combative in Council, except on military matters, we dare say that Sir Charles Trevelyan and he will get on very smoothly together.

Sir Charles Trevelyan landed at Calcutta on the evening of the 12th of Jan., and was duly saluted by the guns of Fort William. On the next day he was sworn in as an ordinary member of the Council of the Governor-general of India, and took his seat, under the usual salute, thus losing one day's pay by arriving a little too late on the 12th to go through the ceremony. He is said to have gone at once to a crowded hotel—Spence's, we suppose, as still the most fashionable establishment of the kind in the City of Palaces, but we are surprised that he was not invited to the Government-house, as a temporary arrangement. But the hospitality of Calcutta is not what it was. Not very many years ago no respectable Englishman would have been allowed to take up his residence even for a week at a house of public entertainment. He would have been sure to have had hospitality pressed upon him with an earnestness quite irresistible; besides, inns were then filthy and disreputable places. Mr. Spence was Lord Amherst's butler, or head European domestic, and when his master left India he conceived the project of a really respectable hotel. He had money enough to open the establishment on a splendid scale, and it was so truly comfortable, and the accommodations, though first-rate, were so reasonable in the cost, that it speedily became as popular and as crowded as it is at this day. David Wilson, who went out to India as a ship's cook, soon followed the example, and established a rival concern, the most extensive pastrycook's and boarding establishment in the presidency, and called "The Hall of all Nations." It is now under the management of a limited liability company. We mention these little facts to account for a great social change in Calcutta. Spence and Wilson have rendered strangers quite independent of the old-fashioned private hospitality. Still, an old Indian like Sir Charles Trevelyan, who has spent many years in Calcutta, must have been intimately acquainted with hundreds of persons of respectable position, and large means, who would have been proud and delighted to open their doors to a distinguished friend until he had time to look about him and choose his fixed residence; and his resorting to an hotel seems either not very gracious in Sir Charles, or his being suffered to do so seems not very honourable to the society of a city once so pre-eminently famous for its hospitality. Sir Charles Trevelyan is not quite so popular in Calcutta as he seems to have been at Madras; but still, upon the whole, he is highly esteemed as a public man, and has many private friends there, and the local press seems disposed to augur nothing but good of him in his new appointment, though it does not suppress a few allusions to his eccentricities and wilfulness, and his disposition to ride his hobbies somewhat impetuously.

The Indian papers are still speculating hopefully on the recall or retirement of Sir Hugh Rose, but when the present storm against him has passed over, the British Indian community will remember with pride and pleasure the antecedents of this gallant soldier in the battlefield, and forget and forgive a few late bursts of foolish irritation and ill-judged exertions of authority on matters which were properly beyond his jurisdiction. We are sorry to hear that his health has suffered considerably during his recent tour, and that he will probably have to remain some time at Allahabad to recover from his fatigue and exposure. He wears well, and looks very much younger than he is, and, like most active-minded and energetic men, he is apt to forget his years, and sometimes rashly competes with younger and stouter frames in great physical exertion. He takes rides under an Indian sun that would quite exhaust men in the prime of life "in the cold and cloudy clime where he was born."

We have made inquiry as to the correctness of the reports which are freely and confidently circulated in the Indian papers as to the recall of Sir Hugh Rose. We are unable to trace any foundation for the reports, and must take upon ourselves to state that no orders have been, or are likely to be, sent to India for the recall of the Commander-in-Chief.

The Countess of Elgin reached Calcutta on the 8th of January. A Grand State Ball was postponed from the 6th to the 14th, to enable her ladyship to be present. A grand ball had also been given at the Government House at Madras, on the 21st of January, at which 500 guests were present. His Excellency and Lady Frere gave a warm and courteous welcome to every one of their visitors, and did their best, like hosts in private life, to make all feel at home.

Sir W. Mansfield is in Rajpootana.

Sir Joseph Arnould has resigned the Vice-Chancellorship of the Bombay University, and Sir Alexander Grant, Bart., has been nominated to the office.

From what has reached us we should not be at all surprised to learn that inducements will be held out for the officers in the higher grades of the corps of engineers and artillery to retire.

In the Legislative Council the Governor-General of India, on the 14th of January, introduced a Bill to give effect to certain provisions of a treaty between the Viceroy and Governor-General of India and his Majesty the King of Burmah. This treaty is regarded as a step towards opening up an intercourse and trade between British Burmah and Burmah Proper and the States on the South-West frontier of China. Some of the British traders complain that the terms of the treaty are too favourable to the Burmese; but it is very difficult, in the first instance, to drive a stringent bargain with a suspicious and semi-savage people. Objectionable clauses in the treaty can more easily be amended when these people know us better.

The Directors of the Bank of Bengal have declared a dividend for the half-year ending 31st December of 12 per cent. per annum free of income-tax.

The Bombay and Baroda line of railway was opened at Ahmedabad on the 20th January.

Major R. H. Keatinge, of the Bombay Artillery, political agent in Kattywur, was formally invested with the Victoria Cross in Bombay, on the 13th of January, in the presence of his Excellency the Governor and Lady Frere. An account of the ceremony, which was a very imposing one, will be found in another column.

The Royal warrant authorising the distribution of the booty captured at Satasee to the Sarun Field Force, is published in the Calcutta Gazette.

The Bengal Hurkaru states that the subscriptions from the Presidency to the Lancashire Relief Fund had reached £27,000 on the 19th of Jan., and money was still flowing in; £25,000 of that amount had already been sent to the Lord Mayor of London. The Bombay contribution to the Lancashire Relief Fund exceeds £3,500.

There is in a London paper a silly paragraph, said to be extracted from a private letter from a merchant at Calcutta, to the effect that some people had exhibited their wit and malice by burning the Secretary of State in effigy. We should hardly have thought that a British merchant in these days would resort to so childish a mode of demolishing an obnoxious statesman. The letter writer's words are:—"We had our annual dinner on New Year's day at —, which was attended by many friends; and such a bonfire! We made a capital effigy of Sir C. Wood out of straw and old clothes, and only regretted that the original was not available for the occasion." Sir Charles Wood would be thin-skinned indeed if he could not afford to laugh at such stuff as this.

Lieutenant Jackson's fate is not yet known, but it is generally supposed that he will be acquitted of the capital charge. The man whom he was said to have whipped to death was suffering from Bright's disease, and was altogether in a bad state of health. The flogging did not cause, though it accelerated his death. But still Lieutenant Jackson's proceedings were unworthy of a brave man and a gentleman. He tied up the poor wretch to a tree, and beat him with his own hand until exhausted, and directed others to continue the brutal punishment. When the cane broke, a knotted stick was broken from the tree, and applied to the sufferer's naked back. It would be a disgrace to the Queen's Government if this sort of tyranny towards our native fellow subjects were not severely punished.

THE FANCY BALL AT GOVERNMENT HOUSE.

Even in the "gorgeous East" it is but rarely that such splendid realisations of fairy land can be seen as in the great hall of Government House in the full tide of last night's spectacle. The Arabian Nights and native durbars give plenty of descriptions and displays of "barbaric gold and pearls," but they lack the infinite variety and exquisite finish of the cultivated European taste which succeeds, if not in "gilding refined gold" with advantage, yet in making a little gilding and judiciously-arranged paste, perchance, display and reflect beauty infinitely beyond the reach of the most massive ingots, or piles of precious stones heaped together anyhow. The four months notice of the ball had evidently been made the most of by many, the gorgeousness of whose array betokened the time and money that had gone to their construction, and the perfect effect of which bespoke their origin in the work-rooms of London and Paris. Not that the costumiers of Calcutta are unequal to the task, but that comparatively few incomes are equal to the strain of their charges for such vanities. The cards notified nine o'clock, and by a quarter before ten a large assemblage having come together in the great ball-room, the band playing "God save the Queen" announced the entrance of his Excellency the Viceroy and the Countess of Elgin into the northern reception-room; and the communication having been thrown open, the splendid array began to defile before their Excellencies; in whose vicinity were ranged Sir Charles and Lady Trevelyan, the Lieutenant-Governor, with the usual attendance of the staff, and a crowd of legislators and others having the privilege of the private entree. In a few minutes the circle was broken up, and for 'the rest of the night "in social estimation fancy free" the visitors, not for the hour the great Panjandrum, of the "upper ten" in ice-bound reserve, or Mr. John Brown-Smith, endued with a proper sense of his humility, but the Grand Turk or Paddy from Cork, as the case might be, took their chances in the living kaleidoscope. One thing was remarkable, that, very judiciously, the "fancies" were restricted to Europeans, who could alone, by education and habits, enter into an amusement the peculiar character of which the natives of India could not, from their social usages, put a proper construction upon. That no other reason prevailed was evident from the presence among the invited of their Highnesses the Mysore Princes Gholam Mahomed and Feroze Shah, whose residence in Europe and presence at the entertainments of English Royalty gave them a claim to the consideration conceded to them. The Rajah Deo Narain Singh and Rajah Dinkur Rao, as members of the Governor-General's Council, and the venerable Rajah Radakant Deb, the recognised head of the orthodox Hindoos of Calcutta, were the fitting representatives of the native element; the only other native gentleman present being the Rajah of Vizianagram, a Madras magnate passing through Calcutta en route to Benares on a pilgrimage. The preliminary reception being passed, words must fail in conveying a just idea of the brilliant crowd that momentarily assumed new aspects, each more dazzling than the former. The hall, as usual, was admirably lighted with the wax lights which are so unapproachable for effect; one of the old modes which exceptionally defy all modern innovations. And these—

"Lights shone o'er fair women and brave men," such as might safely challenge any city in the world to compare with in equal numbers. Of the twelve hundred invitations issued, the crowded state of the rooms showed how few were absent; and all vied in the production of the best effect in almost as many ways as there were individuals present. Of course there were many repetitions of various stock characters for such occasions, but where each had set to work to "get up regardless of expense," even the repetitions were most amusing in the varieties of detail arising out of individual character in the—wearers?—masquers was nearly written, but, alas for the perfection of anything mundane! the masks were the one thing wanting. Apart from that want the spectacle was perfect; the consequent embarras des richesses rendered individual distinction impossible. There were queens of all ages—that is, of course of all eras; there are no ladies of uncertain age at fancy balls. Marquises by the dozen, unspeakably be-patched, be-powdered, be-tizzened and bewitching; and marquises by the score to match, some elegant, some awkward, but all duly bewigged and bewitched as in duty bound. Heathens of all sorts that could be made piquantes with due regard to the proprieties; some of them so beautiful that thoughtless male juvenility might well feel tempted to declare for those gods who ranked such terrestrial goddesses among the tenants of their mythic paradises. Peasants of all sorts and sizes, he's in velvets, and she's in silks and satins, carrying unwonted sickles in uncongenial white-kid gloves. Nights of endless stately styles of dark beauty, and bright accompanying knights of countless styles, authentic or imaginative. The Waverley Novels complete were there, as to the heroines, with most of the heroes, except Dugald Dalgetty, who might have been well represented by some of the failures in other parts, who had been characteristically enough turned out though, as it was; of course "bound in calf and gilt, but not lettered." Every nationality under the sun was represented, and a great many nationalities altogether original seemed to have been invented for the occasion—Greeks, Turks, Franks, Germans of all times, since the first of them meditated over his pipe the subsidence of the great Deluge,—Swiss, Tyroleans, Danes, Norwegians, Wallachs, Moldavians, Circassians, Moors, or rather Moosesses, who might have come down straight from Mahomed's seventh heaven,—Chinese and Affghans, and every sort of Mahometan ever invented,—English, from William the Conqueror's time down to George the Second's own physician, resuscitated for Lord Elgin's behoof. There was a fourteenth century Prussian of such stalwart mould that it is fortunate for Europe all his race were not such as he,—Irishmen were there with shillelagh and brogue, and occasionally the brogue peeped out from under some strange disguise and helped to betray its owner; and a Welsh girl represented that branch of the Celts. But the gem of the nationalities was Columbia herself, gallantly bearing aloft the stars and stripes, supported by her sailor consort. Water Nymphs and Water Lilies walked conscious of the fair Undine their queen of the night; and a speechless Ophelia and silent Syrens left the beauty of their music to the pervading "fancy" of the occasion; whilst Lucreia, with her back hair agonizingly dishevelled, was as mute as Norma, who brushed past her in her jealous search for truant Pollio, who had not kept his appointment. Grave quakers scandalised the friends by the introduction of the broadest of brims and squarest of toes, and in the excitement of the moment one was observed rubbing the begging bag of a hungry-looking Capuchin friar, whose austere attention had been diverted for the moment by the resistless charms of a Spanish dancer, whose face he never saw, for in his sudden enchantment his eyes never reached much above her ankles. Other friars, gray, brown, and black, looked after nuns, who they thought could have no more business there than themselves. And a composite construction, half black half white, proclaimed himself in golden letters "the only genuine Night and Morning;" and he was kept in countenance by one extensive gentleman who came in under some pretence of fancy covering, but throwing off his shell appeared as a "gentleman of the period," in all the glory of black cloth. There was a roped enclosure for four previously arranged sets of quadrilles, two of Mousquetaires, the Louis Quatorze and Spanish, the effect of which was excellent so far, as the crowd would permit them to be seen. Then the dancing became general, and seemed none the less enjoyable to the dancers than the numbers gave about two square feet each of space, for dresses that would overflow square yards instead. Lord Elgin, moving freely as is his wont through the rooms, seemed to enjoy as much as any a scene more splendid than has before been seen in Calcutta, and quite beyond the mark of fancy balls in European capitals, where such occasions are more frequent and far more economically carried out as regards the bulk of the costumes. An experience of the four greatest of those capitals recalls nothing superior to this. Where the hair dressers were found who got up the countless ornamental head dressers was beyond comprehension; and there can hardly be any more hair powder in Calcutta, except such as will be swept from the floors of Government-house this morning. At about one o'clock the "Roast Beef of Old England" called the dancers to refreshment after labour, and the supper suffered for the extra exertions of the dance pursued under difficulties; and at a late hour the renewed dancing was in full vigour. As a whole, this fancy ball was the most perfect success. Calcutta owes to Lord Elgin an evening of unusual pleasure, and his lordship must be pleased with the spirit in which the whole European community met and appreciated his endeavour to promote the social enjoyment so afforded them.—Englishman, Jan. 15.

THE EXPORT OF SILVER TO INDIA.

There recently appeared in the columns of the Manchester Guardian an article which, among other things, deals with the export of silver from England to this country. That the Guardian is wrong in attributing it to the cause it does no one here will for a moment doubt; and we doubt much even if the writer of the article in question was not equally aware of the fact when he penned it. The Guardian asserts that, "although about a year back Sir Charles Wood gave a distinct pledge that the system of draining England of capital for Indian railway works, by means of Government guarantees, should be brought within moderate limits, he has paid little regard to this promise, and tempted by the ease in the discount market and by the promptings of the powerful India merchants in London, who are all connected as directors with these railway companies, or with the great Indian banks, who like to see money poured out from this country to stimulate Indian enterprise, he has encouraged a sustained expenditure of fully the old rate." We are, therefore, to understand from the Guardian that the silver which is now being shipped from England to this country is sent by Government for railway purposes. Verily, Manchester men of the present day would have delighted Dr. Johnson, who loved a good hater, for they do in truth hate Sir Charles Wood. We have certainly no cause to love him, but we should, for all that, never dream of going out of our way to traduce him. We never hesitate to comment freely on his acts or to condemn those we do not approve, but we cannot, like the Guardian, attribute to a disregard for his pledge by Sir Charles Wood that which we know to arise from a very different cause. Had the Manchester Guardian really intended to state facts, or, not knowing the real bearings of the case, had taken trouble to inquire, he would have ascertained that, so far from raising money in England for Indian railway works. Sir Charles Wood has declined to accept any more for the present, and at the time of writing, and for some months past, the Indian Government has been providing all the money requisite for these works.

It is now upwards of two years since money has been received by the Government of India from the Secretary of State for India. The million sterling which has just been repaid was the last money received from home. Had the Guardian ever reflected on the subject it could scarcely have failed to strike him that while India has to provide all the home expenditure, civil and military, ordinary and extraordinary, as well as the interest on loans and on railway stock and debentures held in England, there could be no need to remit silver to this country. It would but be sending it here to be returned. The fact is, as is well known to our readers in this country, though apparently not to the Manchester community, that for very long past the money which has been raised in England for railway purposes has not been transmitted to this country at all, but has been held in deposit in England to meet the claims against the Government in this country on account of home expenditure, &c. The bullion sent by the Secretary of State for India to India has never been, and never can be, sufficient greatly to affect exchanges. Nor when large sums were annually drawn from India, as they now again are, was the money market at all affected by it.

The true causes for the large remittances of silver which are reaching this country are to be found in a very different direction. In the first place we may find them in the necessity for cash to purchase cotton; for, pace the Guardian, very extensive purchases are now being made of the raw material in this country on account of Manchester and Liverpool houses. That the cotton so purchased is required for consumption in England we do not assert: there is no doubt that much of what is now being shipped from this country has been purchased for foreign markets. France requires a large quantity and takes it from Liverpool, in preference to entering into any direct competition with other buyers in the country. America, or, properly speaking, the Federal States, are importing Indian cotton largely from Liverpool, and large profits are being realised. To meet the demand it becomes necessary to stimulate cultivation here; and without money this cannot be done. Silver, therefore, in considerable quantities is finding its way rapidly to both Bombay and Calcutta for this purpose.

There is, however, yet another reason for the existing flow of silver to India. The proceeds of opium sales in China are finding their way to this country, via London. It is a somewhat roundabout route, but not an unprofitable one. It is in this wise. Opium sent to China is paid for by shipments of silk to England, whence the proceeds of its sale are forwarded in silver here and to Bombay; moreover, money required in China from England is made to multiply and increase by the way, by forwarding it here, and, in the shape of opium, rice, or cotton, re-transmitting it to China. Had the Guardian duly considered all these causes for the large remittances being made hitherward, it might possibly have let Sir Charles Wood alone, and not have blamed him for that of which he is innocent. We say might, for, considering how much reason Manchester has to dislike the present Secretary of State for India, it is on the cards that the real bearings of the case were as apparent to the Guardian as to us, and that all our contemporary wanted was a peg on which to hang an attack on his foe.—Englishman, Jan. 6.

DOMESTIC AFFLICTION IN THE ROYAL FAMILY OF SIAM.

The following circular from the First King of Siam is very oriental, curious, and characteristic:—

The sad and mournful circular from his gracious Majesty Somdet Phra Paramend Maha Mongkut, the reigning supreme King of Siam, intimating the death of his Majesty's most affectionate well beloved and lamented second royal son, his Royal Highness Prince Krom Mu'n Visunarth, whose loss is now mournfully sustained by his Majesty and the Royal Family and the principal members of the Government of Siam.

To all the foreign friends of his Majesty and of his late lamented highness, resident or trading in Singapore, Malacca, Penang, Ceylon, Batavia, Saigon, &c., and in Europe, America, China, &c.

His late Royal Highness Prince N. L. Suprathit was the second son of his gracious Siamese Majesty Somdet Phra Paramend Maha Mongkut, the reigning supreme King of Siam (the fourth sovereign in the present dynasty), was born of his Majesty's first wife (a late lady, the granddaughter of the first founder of the Capital at Bangkok before the present Royal dynasty), on the 19th May, Anno Christi, 1824, being the last year of the second reign of the current dynasty and the twentieth year of his royal father, and was known formerly by the name of Prince Nuleck in Siamese, and in Sanskrit Prince Suprathit. When he grew up he, being most honest and faithful in the service of his father, was appointed head of the household and treasurer of his father on the expiration of the third reign of the current dynasty, when his esteemed Royal father ascended the throne, and his elder full brother, named in Siamese Prince Nuyai, and in Sanskrit Nobhawong, was appointed the superintendent of the garrisons of the grand palace with the dignified title of "His Royal Highness Krom Mu'n Mahesuar Sivavilas" when his royal mother died.

This prince Suprathit, the head of the household and treasurer of his Royal father, for his goodness, honesty, and faithfulness in the fulfilment of his duties, &c., became more affectionate and well-beloved to his Royal father and the Royal family, and for his courtesy, circumspection, &c., he was pleased and beloved by every member of the Siamese Government and people in general, both native and foreign; so in the year 1856 he was required unanimously by council of Government to be appointed superintendent of Great Government Treasury, entitled with the dignified title of his Royal Highness Prince Krom Mu'n Visunarth Nibhadhorne. He, with funds being his own property, entered into some trading business, and, being much respected by merchants in general, both native and foreign, almost every one of the farmers of Government duties in various things, and the collectors of revenue, have made over some private portions to him more than to other princes of Siam; consequently he became fortunately the richest prince in Siam, and the most prosperous.

Although he was so happy in appearance, yet in his bodily nature he was very often sick since the earlier part of his life; dysentery and pain in the interior part of his body attacked him; his countenance frequently seemed pale until the year of the Siamese civil era 1223, corresponding to the Christian year 1861, in the middle of July of which year he visited several Siamese ports on the eastern coast of the Malay Peninsula, in the Siamese steamer Enemy Chaser, and also visited Singapore and Penang, where he became acquainted with many foreigners, the Government of the Straits settlement, &c., and afterwards returned home overland via Kedah to Singora. He made this long journey in order to breathe the marine atmosphere or fresh sea air, and for a change of climate to improve his health. During his journey he was very happy and healthy, but in the current year of the Siamese era 1224, corresponding to the Christian year 1862, he had a severe attack of his former disease, but more painfully, and was indisposed during the month of September; and in October he seemed to be so much better that he considered himself well, and stated that he had wholly recovered his good health; but on the latter part of the said month he, seeing symptoms of the appearance of his sickness, again took a journey on board of his small steamer Firefly, and accompanied his Royal father on a visit to Ayudia, Sarapury, and Lavo, for change of climate, and breathing the good air in the fields of Ayudia and Lavo. Whilst he was on board his steamer anchored on the lake, or inundation before the city of Lavo, on the night of the 3rd of November, he was attacked with strong bodily affliction, which compelled him to return home before his Royal father, who afterwards, hearing of the sickness of his son, followed him to Bangkok the next day. During the month of November the Prince was very ill, and daily growing worse, discharging great quantities of corrupted blood from his body.

Several doctors, physicians, native and foreign, Chinese, English, &c., were called to examine his case; they all stated alike that it was liver complaint, or an injury of the stomach, and that it was incurable; but finally the prince seemed to be a little better in appearance during a few days in the latter part of November and two days of the beginning of December; but on the night of the 3rd day of December his urine was entirely stopped, and violent asthma seized him, and continued upward. Dr. D. B. Bradley and Dr. Campbell endeavoured to relieve him in various ways, but without success. The Prince, knowing of his approaching and inevitable death, called a writer to make out his last will, assigning certain portions of his property to be distributed among his eleven children and wives, and one of his nephews, being his elder brother's son, who had been long under his care, and a certain part to be consecrated to the monastery belonging to himself now remaining in progress of building for the Buddhist religious service, and the remainder, being the greatest part of his property, was offered and delivered to his esteemed Royal father the Supreme King of Siam, as he trusted that the King would attend well to his funeral service and subsequently favour to his family and kindred. The prince then requested his father to sit at the side of his head and his elder brother at the left side, and talked with them distinctly and intelligibly until the last minutes of his life, saying that he was not sorry, because he knew that this path must be followed by every human being, and that his life was rendered short from the sickness to which his body had been subject since his youth, &c., and solicited pardon from his father and elder brother for his certain mistake during his life, and took leave of his father, brothers, and sister, and his own family, in a respectful and regardful tone until his last word. At eight o'clock p.m., on Thursday, 4th December, 1862, his eyes became turned up, his speech was gone, and only a slight breathing continued, eight or ten minutes after eight o'clock p.m. the prince expired in presence of the High priest of Siam and his father, elder brother, and younger brothers and sister, and his own family, whom he left most mournful and lamenting.

The days of the life of this prince were 14,078 in number, being thirty-eight years six months and a-half. His children were eleven in number, three of whom are sons, the eldest fourteen years of age, and eight daughters, the eldest of whom is sixteen years of age, and there were a few of his children who died before him.

At present days the prince's remains are kept in a royal urn at his residence, according to the Siamese royal custom, waiting the preparations for his funeral ceremony, which will take place about the month of April or May of the ensuing year.

Whereas this prince, just deceased, was known to many and acquainted with several foreign friends in various regions of the world, so his Majesty the King of Siam, his mournful royal father, has caused this circular to be published to communicate the information of this sad intelligence relating to the life and decease of the late prince, his beloved second son since his birth, to all his and his son's friends abroad, who his Majesty trusts will take part sympathising and condoling with him in true friendship, and that this news will produce great emotion in the breasts of those who are under good religious feelings, teaching them that there is an eternal life, as they may see that death comes to every one of mankind in every age, region, or place and time, without exception, and his friends will be glad to observe this mark or proof of his Majesty's true friendship towards them too.

As his Majesty has observed the flags at every foreign consulate here, and those of every vessel lying in the river Chau Phya, were half-masted three days after the death of his late son as a mark of condolence with him, his Majesty was thankful to them.

By his Siamese Majesty's royal mandate this circular was printed in the Royal printing-office, Bangkok, on the 8th December, A.D. 1862.—Singapore Free Press.

AMONG THE PEOPLE.

HOOGHLY ZILLAH, Dec. 29.—I have just returned from a short tour through a portion of the Hooghly district. I have walked right across the country from the Hooghly to the Damoodah, halting two or three times on the road, and spending a few days in going three, four, or five miles in different directions, for the purpose of visiting villages, schools, &c. It is so seldom that we get actual facts as to the condition of the people amongst whom we live, that it has struck me a few lines detailing somewhat of what I have seen and heard may not be altogether useless.

I was quite astonished at the extent of ground under cultivation, and at the careful manner in which the earth is tilled. I had always joined in the current belief that the Bengalees would do very little hard work unless actually obliged to do so. But for miles along the main road from Boidabatty, and for some few miles on each side of it, we saw field after field of potatoes and sugar-cane. The whole country looks splendidly, and the potato fields are kept as clean as a gentleman's garden in England. The ground had evidently been well dug, the seed put in in straight lines, and the furrows kept perfectly free from weeds. The potato fields are all raised, and the places from which the earth is dug form tanks by the side of the field from which the plants are watered. Every drop of water is thrown up from these tanks by two men swinging ropes attached to a small triangular basket made of palm leaves. In the majority of instances the water was so low that it had to be flung up to a hole dug in a terrace made in the side of the tank, and from there it had again to be flung up into the field. In many cases it had to be thrown up three times, and in two or three instances four times before it reached the field. The plants are, of course, in different stages of growth, some only three or four inches high, some just in flower, and in a few cases the potatoes were being dug. The yield was most abundant. It would not be above the average to say that each plant yielded from a seer to a seer and a half of potatoes—and fine large potatoes too. Nearly all the potatoes grown in the neighbourhood through which we passed are sent down to Boidyabatty, where they are bought up for the Calcutta market; though in nearly every mart that we visited, and we visited a great many, we saw considerable quantities exposed for sale, showing that they are used to no small extent as an article of food by the people themselves. The same evidence of care is apparent in the cultivation of sugar-cane; every single stalk is carefully wrapped up. But though the rent is high—the potato grounds, I was told, fetching generally eight rupees a beegah—and the labour necessarily continued and heavy, the yield is so great as to give the cultivator large profits. In fact, any one going through the country as I did would be impressed with the belief that the people were well off. They had a well-to-do look about them. Of course I may be wrong. It may be that if I had spent a longer time among them I should have seen poverty and distress; but one fact to my mind spoke volumes. We continued for four or five days in each place, but though numbers came to our tents daily, not one single instance of begging did we meet with the whole time we were away.

But the state of the roads in many places is simply disgraceful. The main road about three miles from Boidyabatty is impassable for any kind of vehicle except the country bullock hackeries, and they, by their weight, have beaten ruts in which they can now pass with tolerable ease; but let me give one instance that came under my own immediate observation. We were walking from Hurreepal to Doarhatta, between which two places the main road from Boidyabatty joins that from Howrah. Very near this junction are two or three broken places extending for about a hundred yards. In some places the rise and fall is quite three feet from the level of the road. Just as we got there a train of seventeen hackeries heavily laden with cotton was coming from Howrah. I did not believe that the carts could possibly pass over the road, it was so bad. My native companions laughed at me, and said it was nothing compared with what it was in other places. I stopped to see how they would manage, and certainly the transit over that spot was accompanied with no little danger. Two men took the bullocks by the head and two stood behind the cart, and they set the bullocks at it with a rush, and with the impetus gained in the first descent they rushed on until the place was passed; then they went back and brought on another. The motion of the heavily-laden carts while passing over this rough place was exactly like that of a boat when a heavy sea is on. They took half an hour going something less than a hundred yards. Near the same place a bridge has recently been built across the road; the base of the arch is about four feet, and the highest point of the arch is fully eighteen inches above the level of the road. Just fancy what an impediment that must be running right across the only road there is. It is not that the road has been washed away from it. It has very recently been built, and has evidently been built at that height above the road. The hackery-wallahs got over, or rather avoided the difficulty by turning the bullocks off the road, making a circuit through the paddy-fields and scrambling up the best way they could the other side. Let it be understood that in condemning the road thus I am not speaking of a bye road across the country, but of the main road running from Howrah. The spot above referred to is near the 27th mile-stone, not far from Doarhatta, and if any of your readers doubt the accuracy of the above description, just let them take a walk, as I did, to the 27th mile-stone from Howrah, and they will see that I have not exaggerated the disgraceful state of the road there. I will not trouble you with any inference as to the effect such roads must have upon "the development of the resources" of the country, I only want to state facts. Let your readers draw conclusions for themselves.

Then, as to the condition of the schools in the neighbourhood. We visited several, and at the first learnt a lesson that we afterwards felt was of no small importance—namely, that it would be useless to expect to see the actual condition of a school if we gave notice of our intention to visit it. We had been invited to visit it in this instance, and were therefore expected. Every seat was filled, everything in order, and all evidently prepared for us. It was pleasing to see nearly a hundred boys gathered together in a school in a small village; and although there was a great deal too much show, yet the teachers seemed interested and pleased with their work, and the boys were evidently learning something. We visited only two aided schools, and were anything but satisfied with their condition. In the one case we had gone to the village not knowing that a school had been established there. While on the way we overtook a lad who had a bundle of school-books in his hand, and was evidently going to school. It was then about one o'clock. We entered into conversation with him; he told us he attended an English school, and that it began at eleven, but he seemed exceedingly unconcerned at being so late. We went into the bazaar, and while standing there a note was put into my hand, of which the following is a verbatim copy:—"Sir, beg to you information kindly come to Governmet school and visit," signed "one of the masters." We went, and found sixteen or seventeen boys present, but were told that the school numbered 150 or 160. Not one was present in the first or second class. We were told by the people that we saw it in its usual state, that when the Inspector came a large number of boys was got together; but that on ordinary occasions the teachers were scarcely ever at the school till twelve, one, and sometimes two o'clock. The other aided school was not much better. Only fourteen boys were present out of sixty and upwards, and the school was held temporarily in the reception-room of a dwelling house, where scores of pigeons had taken up their abode, and I should think their dirt had not been swept away for weeks. The noise they made was such as to render it impossible to hear with ease anything that was said. We were invited to visit another school, but as we could not go on the day fixed, we went the next day. We found only six or seven boys, and were told by the masters, with most beautiful simplicity, "Oh, sir, we expected you here yesterday, and then all the boys were here; but we did not expect you to-day, and therefore they have not come." The state of education throughout seemed in a very unsatisfactory condition. Somehow or other, the majority of boys in the large villages had learnt to read, but as places of mental discipline the schools throughout the whole district we traversed are all but useless. In several places schools might with great advantage be established, and there are large numbers of children to attend them.

As to the religious condition of the people, it can only be described as one of utter destitution. They have lost all faith in their own systems, they don't care about defending them, and will even join in ridiculing them; but they are none the more willing to accept a higher and a better faith. Their material condition seems prosperous to a high degree. Would that it were so to any extent with their mental and religious state. It becomes those who have set their hands to the work of evangelising India to see to it that the inhabitants of the districts bordering upon Calcutta itself do not remain in the state of mental and religious darkness in which they now are. —W. S.—Friend of India, Jan. 1.

MISCELLANEOUS.

SIR CHARLES TREVELYAN.—The arrival of Sir Charles Trevelyan in Calcutta will prove, if we mistake not, an epoch in the history of the Indian Council, in which he took his seat yesterday afternoon under the usual salute from the guns of Fort William; and it now depends entirely upon the new Chancellor whether the event will be for good or for evil. He left England flushed with the consciousness that the one blot upon the high reputation of Indophilus had been removed. He has just received an ovation at Madras which testifies to his great popularity in the southern Presidency, and has, no doubt, gladdened his heart after thirty months of inactivity and gloom. But the pleasant time is over for the nonce. At Calcutta his reputation does not stand so high, and grave forebodings are rife in official circles. His brother members of Council, the very men with whom he will come in constant and familiar contact, are mostly on the qui vive. But upon two points he is strong—the mercantile community will soon, if not at once, be inclined to give him their support, and at the same time—singular anomaly—he is known to have the confidence of Sir Charles Wood. Sir Charles Trevelyan is not a reformer in the revolutionary or radical sense of the word; but at the same time he has the reputation everywhere of being a man who can never be quiet; and no one in the world seems more to need the Divine warning, "In peace and quietness shall be your strength." The most successful measure which has been hitherto carried out by Sir Charles Trevelyan, and one of the greatest measures which has been carried out in the Madras Presidency since the days of Munro, is the settlement of free tenures known as Inams. The difficulties attending this question had been harassing the Government and the directors, and promoting fraud and forgery amongst the people for at least half a century, but they were all removed by Sir Charles Trevelyan in less time than it took Sir William Denison to write his onslaught on the Essayists and Reviewers, and created scarcely more disturbance than was excited by the appearance of that still-born publication. We, therefore, trust that our new Chancellor will not by any unnecessary novelty create any unnecessary opposition; and that he will bear in mind that, like Moses, he has to deal with a stiff-necked community. On the whole, we are inclined to give our new Chancellor a hearty welcome as one who combines Indian with English experience, and whose past financial reputation gives us some confidence in his future. But whilst two and two make four in the days of Lord Elgin, just as they did in the days of Lord William Bentinck, he will find that in some other respects the world has made a considerable advance since those halcyon days, and never so rapidly as within the last ten years. Moreover, Calcutta is not like unto Madras. However, we do not desire to croak like the chorus that welcomed back Agamemnon; we hail the return of Sir Charles Trevelyan to India like that of the return of the prodigal son, and trust that before the sittings of the Legislative Council have closed the Income-tax will have been offered up as a sacrifice to those avenging Furies who previously demanded his recall.—Englishman, Jan. 14.

SALE OF WASTE LANDS AT DARJEELING.—On the 6th Jan. a sale of waste lands took place at the Superintendent's cutcherry; there was some very spirited bidding and a tolerably full attendance of purchasers, some of whom had come expressly from Calcutta, looking out for bargains. Prices, however, ran rather high. There were only four lots that were not put up to auction, in consequence of there being no second applicant for the grants. The whole of the lots, twenty-nine in number, that were sold, were then applied for and registered under the resolution of the late Lord Canning, dated the 17th of October, 1861; but only two of them had been paid for in full, at Rs. 2-8 an acre at the time of application. These were one of five hundred acres, purchased by Mr. H. Dear, and three hundred acres purchased by Mr. C. Rundle. These gentlemen, under the very reasonable impression that their original purchase was a bona fide purchase, cautioned the public, by advertisement, against purchasing these lots at the public sale, and also entered at the time of sale a protest against their being put up. They were, however, notwithstanding this, put up to auction, and the only bidder, fearless of the caution and protest, was Mr. E. T. Fitzgerald; the consequence was that Mr. Dear had to bid up to Rs. 25 per acre, and Mr. Rundle to Rs. 20 an acre, in order to keep out third parties in a contest which it is expected will yet take place on this subject. It was stated at the time of sale, by the Superintendent of Darjeeling, that Messrs. Dear and Rundle's case had been submitted to the Board of Revenue for instructions, and that as a matter of favour—bless the mark!—they would allow the lots to be withdrawn from sale, provided they would give ten rupees an acre for the land. This they unhesitatingly declined doing, as it would be tantamount to acknowledging their first purchase unsound. Now, let us look at this transaction in a mercantile point of view. A large and influential firm sends one of its partners, or an agent with general power, abroad to transact the business there; and in the course of business this partner or agent advertises goods, houses, and lands for sale at a certain fixed price. A purchaser, in accordance with that advertisement, applies to the agent, pays down the full purchase price, gets possession of his goods, houses, or lands as the case may be, commences expending money on them with a view of rendering them profitable; but in the midst of his career, another partner or agent sends him notice repudiating the sale, and declares he shall not have the goods, houses, or lands unless he pays an enhanced price for them. What would the whole body of merchants think of such a transaction? Would not the finger of scorn be pointed at them? Would they not be avoided by all honourable men? And if necessity compelled transactions with them, would not every means which the law provides be resorted to to bind them to their agreements and transactions? But, if the purchaser were in a condition to contest the point in a court of law, what must be the decision of that court? It appears to me that law, equity, and justice must decide in favour of the purchaser. Will, however, Messrs. Dear and Rundle contest this point? If they do, it can only be for the sake of a principle. The difference between the original purchase price of Mr. Dear's land and that which he has now had to pay is Rs. 11,250; and that of Mr. Rundle Rs. 5,250. If it is possible to throw the case into equity, no doubt the law advisers of the Government will do so, and then where will it end, and what will be the cost? It is, however, believed that these gentlemen will leave no stone unturned to establish and maintain their equitable rights under the resolution of the late Lord Canning. What a happy thing it is that the departed spirits of honourable men are not affected by the transactions of their fellow-men on earth; else how deeply would the spirit of Lord Canning be wounded by this one transaction.

EAST INDIA RAILWAY.—The passenger traffic of the railway has been "paying" well for some short time past. So much as three thousand rupees a day has been realised. The great number of natives bent on a dip in the sea

Ganges at this season of the year has necessitated the running of extra trains both ways. What with special trains for the annual military relief, and others for the pious Hindoo, we hope to learn of a rich harvest for the East India Railway. We are informed that the road to Allypore will be positively open for traffic by the 15th proximo.—Delhi Gazette, Jan. 22.

RAIKES v. JOHN LANG.—In this case the plaintiff, an officer in the Indian Army, had prosecuted the defendant, manager and editor of the Mofussil newspaper, for several defamatory articles in that paper against the plaintiff as a director of the Dehra Doon and North-West of India Tea Company (Limited). The case was called on this morning, and Mr. Doyns, on behalf of the defendant, stated that pleas of justification had been filed, which he desired to withdraw. He expressed his client's regret that, in consequence of wrong information, he had made statements concerning the plaintiff which he now admitted were without foundation, and he submitted to pay the costs of the plaintiff.—Delhi Gazette.

THE COTTON CROP.—We have received reliable returns of the extent to which the cotton crop has been injured in the North-Western Provinces. The produce of the Doab districts will be of an average quantity in proportion to the greatly extended sowings, but the quality will be inferior since the first pickings, which are the finest, were to a great extent lost in the October storms. But in the more important cotton field to the south of the Jumna the failure has been lamentably great, especially in Muttra and Agra, which have nearly 200,000 acres under the crop. In Muttra not half the usual quantity per acre has been secured, and that is of an inferior quality. In Jaloun the yield per acre is estimated at only twenty-two or twenty-four pounds instead of thirty. In Jhansi the loss is one fourth, but as we proceed farther east the out-turn becomes that of an average year. Not so in Gwalior and our feudatory States, where the proportion of produce to the increased area sown is below the average. During the past two months the market price of cotton has varied from 14 rs. in the western to above 21 rs. in the eastern districts per maund. Ghazepore stands highest. But the activity of speculators is not abated. The way in which carriage of every description is pressed into the traffic reminds us of the Famine year. So largely has capital been invested in cotton that the ordinary branches of trade are neglected. The salt revenue has been suddenly checked. More remarkable are the unexpected routes taken by the cotton carts. Westward, on the Grank Trunk-road, carts are found creaking along from Allypore to Umritsur, seeking the Indus route and Kurrahee as the place of export. No less than 12,000 maunds are said to have been despatched from the one mart of Hattass to Putiala and Umritsur, while only 14,000 have taken the old route to Mirzapore. This is the first occasion, for many years, that cotton from the north-west has found its way to the Punjab, and it augurs well for the projected Delhi and Umritsur railway. Agents from Bombay have been so busy in the north-west that the traveller passes long strings of camels each laden with two bales or six maunds of cotton bound for Indore and the western coast. While a maund of cotton is conveyed from Hattass to Umritsur for one rupee, it costs Rs. 2-5-4 to send the same to Calcutta, and 10 annas 8 pie to Mirzapore. The competition is so great that prices are daily rising above these rates. No less wonderful is the quantity of cotton thus despatched. In the nine weeks after 1st October the railway alone conveyed 74,822 maunds from Agra, or 112,500 in half a year, independently of the larger quantity carried by country boats and carts. No less than 71,080 bales of 300 lbs. each, valued at about a million sterling, have been exported from Calcutta to Great Britain in the past eleven months. China, on the contrary, which used to take all the Calcutta cotton, has received only 8,384 bales this year. The result is that silver is flowing up rapidly to Mirzapore. Palmer and Co.'s cotton screws are at work at Cawnpore, and Captain Bird's screws at the Jumna Ghaut are at last ready. Where cotton is not screwed its greatly increased value is now shown by the care devoted to its packing.

CONSTITUTIONAL CHANGES IN INDIA.—The year 1862 opened with the establishment of the new Legislatures under the Indian Councils' Act of Parliament passed in June 1861. Drawn up by the Secretary of State for India on the basis of Lord Canning's recommendations, avowedly to prevent the legislative element from again coming into conflict with the executive, as was the case in the Mysore Grant and Budget discussions in the Council of 1853, the public expected little more than a counterpart of an Asiatic durbar, in which the despotic head of the State should make a show of consulting a few civilians representing the various presidencies, a few native nobles, and a few English merchants. And this "show" was carefully observed by Lord Canning, while the Councils' Act, by restoring to Madras and Bombay and conferring on Bengal the power of local legislation, was not without its compensating advantages. A partial federalism was thus carried out, and the first step was taken towards that concession of self-government from which, in respect to taxation, material improvements, and public contentment, the happiest results may be expected. The presence of Mr. Laing in Lord Canning's Council, moreover, secured after long discussion not a few promising features in the rules for the conduct of business, the most important of which was the admission of the public and the press to the weekly discussions. As if he felt that he had gone perhaps a little too far in narrowing the only channel left for the influence of public opinion, Lord Canning showed an anxiety to give all possible dignity and importance to the legislative debates. The selection of native and non-official members, too, was most satisfactory. When the "Council of the Governor-General for the purpose of making Laws and Regulations" held its first meeting in Government-house on the 18th of January, our native fellow-subjects found themselves represented by a chief of such tried loyalty and so high a position as the Maharajah of Putiala; by a statesman so able as Rajah Dinkur Rao, lately premier of Gwalior; and by a Rajah so public-spirited and intelligent as Deonarain Singh of Benares. The Sheriff of Calcutta, and the President of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce, were, from their position, the most fitting representatives of the non-official class. In Bengal the new legislature met for the first time on the 1st, in Madras on the 4th of February, and in Bombay on the 22nd of January. Only in the last was public opinion outraged by Sir George Clerk's appointment of nameless native gentlemen to fill three out of the four non-official seats. Except in Bengal, which had been accustomed to legislation by Lord Dalhousie's Council, the first session of the local legislatures was remarkable for the total want of ability displayed in the proceedings. The second session of the Bombay Council, under the presidency of Sir Bartle Frere, somewhat redeemed its character.—Friend of India.

NORTH-WESTERN PROVINCES.—H.M.'s 35th Regiment marched into the station on Wednesday, and marched out again on Friday morning, en route to Fyzabad. They are one thousand and fifty strong, and have much improved in health since they left Agra, having only about eighty in hospital now. On Thursday evening their band played out at Mahomed Bagh. There was a very large gathering of the community, and the opinion was that, though a capital band, it did not come up to that of the 48th. In the overture of William Tell, which they regaled us with, we missed the thrilling solo on the clarinet, which we are so accustomed to hear and admire in the musical company of the 48th. Nor did the piccolo obbligato in the same appear to us to be quite the thing. However, the band, as we have said, is a capital one, and will be deemed a great acquisition at Fyzabad.—Oudh Gazette.

PROPOSED TRANSFER OF THE GOVERNMENT OF SINGAPORE TO THE COLONIAL-OFFICE AT HOME.—The chief difficulty which has hitherto stood in the way of the transfer of these Settlements to the Colonial-office has been the alleged deficiency of revenue, the Chancellor of the Exchequer declining to go to the House of Commons to ask for a vote on account of the military expenses. It has been shown, over and over again, that the existing revenue is more than sufficient to cover all the charges which the colony could with any justice be called upon to defray; but still the fact remained that, taking into account the military and convict expenses, there was a deficit to a considerable amount; and this proved a stumbling block in the way of the Treasury, for the Duke of Newcastle has all along shown himself disposed to treat the question in a fair spirit, and recognise the necessity of some part of the charges being defrayed from the Imperial revenues. According to the abstract statement of receipts and disbursements of the Straits Settlement for the year 1861-62, given with the Governor's last Administration report, the actual excess of disbursements over receipts amounted to about £19,500. This includes all charges, local, military, convicts, and on account of the Imperial Government. This it is certain will be much more than covered by the revenue which will be derived from the stamp duties. Various estimates have been made of the sum likely to be realized by Government from this source. One makes it as much as £30,000 from Singapore alone; but even if we admit this to be rather too high a figure, we believe there is little doubt that the stamp duties from the three places—Singapore, Penang, and Malacca—will, at least, reach this sum, and may very probably exceed it. Lord Canning, in his minute on the proposed transfer, written in November, 1859, makes the following very judicious remarks on the financial position of the settlement:—"It must not be overlooked that the revenues of the settlement have been steadily increasing, and that while the receipts have risen from Rs. 8,73,692 in 1854-55, to Rs. 13,23,368 in 1858-59, being an increase of 51 per cent. in four years; the disbursements for civil charges (not including the cost of the foreign convicts) have, in the same interval, risen from Rs. 7,22,107 to Rs. 8,24,913, being an increase of 14 per cent. only. As there is no reason why the civil charges of the settlement should be further increased, it may be anticipated that, if peace should happily be maintained between England and the great European Powers, the revenues of the Straits settlements will in no very long time equal their full charges, military as well as civil. But even if it prove otherwise, and if it should be necessary for England to make some sacrifice in this respect, I hold a clear opinion that it ought to be made in justice alike to the settlements and to India." While on this subject we may notice a curious idea which seems to have got possession of Mr. Blundell's mind, but for which we should think there was no foundation whatever. It is thus alluded to by Lord Canning in the minute before referred to:—"It is not easy to see any sound objections to the proposed transfer of these settlements to the Colonial-office. Mr. Blundell, the late governor, who was consulted on the question, has urged none to which I can attach weight. He thinks that the native community, more particularly the Chinese, might, when informed of the change, be seized with suspicion and alarm. It is not apparent, however, why this should be the consequence of a change which would be attended, in the first place, at all events, with no actual alteration of things in the settlement itself; but, even if Mr. Blundell's opinion be well founded, nothing beyond a little temporary inconvenience need be apprehended, for the Chinese are a very practical people, bent upon making money, and very indifferent to matters in which this is not concerned. As such they are not likely to contend seriously or for long with a fancied grievance in which no substance or reality will be perceptible to themselves."—Singapore Free Press.

RELIEF FOR LANCASHIRE.—The Penang subscriptions to the Lancashire Relief Fund have already reached the very large sum of 5,344 dols. Not the least gratifying circumstance connected with it is that the Chinese and other native residents have contributed upwards of 2,300 dols. of the above sum.—Singapore Free Press.

ACCIDENTAL DEATH OF LIEUTENANT CARTER.

Just after the publication of our last issue we were grieved to learn that a melancholy accident had occurred to an officer of the regiment which had marched from Meerut about a week before. During the halt of the 104th Regiment at Moradabad it appears that some of the officers attended a theatrical performance, and among them Lieut. Carter. While returning from the theatre he was thrown from the conveyance in which he was seated, and one of the wheels passed over his head and crushed it completely. Of course he was taken up dead. We hope we have been misinformed, but we were sorry to hear that the commanding officer of the corps was unwilling to take on himself the responsibility of detaining the men on their march, and therefore proceeded on his way without stopping to discharge the last rites over the gallant deceased. We can scarcely think that this was the case.—Mofussilite.

THE RAJAH OF CHUMBA, having expressed a desire to secure the services of an European officer to assist him in ruling his principality, our Government has sanctioned the employment of Major Blair Thomas Reid on that duty, conditionally on his stipend of Rs. 1,000 per mensem, and other contingent expenses, being paid out of the Rajah's exchequer.

LIEUT. JACKSON.—Accepting the facts as stated by the learned advocate of the culprit, we are disposed to think that the capital charge cannot be sustained, and that he will suffer only a minor punishment; but two years' imprisonment will certainly fall very far short of his deserving, should that prove the extent of his sentence. Ingenious and argumentative as the defence set up for him is, it seems to us to leave him, on his own showing, laden with a heavy amount of criminality, meriting a much heavier punishment. He owns to having deliberately intended to extort confession from his suspected servant, by giving him a sound flogging, in the administration of which he assisted with his own hands at the commencement of the process, until the cane used split, when he ordered branches of the date tree to be substituted, after the leaves had been stripped off, making the stalk a most formidable instrument to employ for such a purpose, as any one may satisfy himself by sending for a date branch, as we did just now, from the nearest compound where date trees are growing, and drawing it through his hand after tearing off the leaves. Its sharp irregularities, added to its strength, weight, and pliability, might satisfy the most brutal inflictor of chastisement as to the amount of torture which it is capable of inflicting, if wielded even with a moderate will. The rattan was certainly a preferable weapon, supposing the floggee to have been allowed a voice in the matter. But Lieutenant Jackson did more than employ the stalks of date leaves. He went into his house, leaving the unhappy man still bound to a tree, having, he says, given orders to his agents in the evil work to stop their operation; which orders were misunderstood by them, so that the flogging was continued for some time afterward, unheard by him, owing to noises in his dwelling. There are great discrepancies in the evidence as to the duration of the punishment, and as to the intervals allowed; but it stands beyond dispute that he meant to chastise the man severely, knowing that he was acting illegally, and that he behaved throughout in a cold-blooded and brutal way. But, he pleads, the man did not faint while tied up, nor yet did he die from the effect of injuries inflicted by his direction, which he might not have survived if in a state of sound bodily health. Internal disease caused his death, according to the doctors' examination at the trial—organic disease of the kidneys. That may have been the case, but it does not help Mr. Jackson very much. There appears to be no room for doubt that the shock sustained by his servant hastened the catastrophe, which might, in the natural course of things, have been indefinitely postponed, and he is consequently responsible for the man's death to a degree stopping short only of the guilt of murder, so far as we can understand the matter.—Madras Athenaeum.

THE KHYRABAD FAIR.—An instance of the rapidity with which an impetus may be communicated to commerce and a trade actually created in localities which were previously not marked by any particular mercantile activity, when the natives have confidence in the Government, is afforded by the success which has attended the attempt of the Deputy Commissioner of the district to set up a fair at Khyrabad in Oude. We have before us the returns of traffic, from which it will appear that a very considerable amount of trade was carried on, and that in a place where three years ago there was no fair at all. We have no means of comparing these returns with those of other fairs, as the Government of India, true to its traditional instincts, would look upon itself probably as gons for ever, if such a thing as a return of horses and camels sold at a fair were furnished to the press. The estimated value of goods sold at the Khyrabad fair of 1862 was as follows:—

Cloth	Rs. 58,988
Metal wares	" 22,124
Small wares	" 9,266
Jewellery	" 4,000
Confectionery	" 6,336
Miscellaneous	" 20,038
Horses and cattle.....	" 32,151
Total ...	" 1,52,848

The detailed return of cattle sold may not be uninteresting:—

3 elephants for	Rs. 2,100 0
5 camels.....	" 394 0
114 horses	" 28,701 0
9 bullocks	" 176 0
26 cows	" 718 0
5 sheep	" 62 8
Total ...	" 32,151 8

All the arrangements at the fair were very good, order prevailed in every quarter, and business and the pursuits of pleasure were carried on with life and spirit and satisfaction to all.—Delhi Gazette.

EXPEDITION TO THIBET.—It will be remembered that, in 1860, Lord Canning projected an expedition to Thibet, of which Dr. T. C. Jerdon, of the Madras Army, was appointed Naturalist. The failure of the Yang-tse expedition to reach Lassa made it impossible to obtain reliable passports from Peking, and Dr. Jerdon was placed on special duty by Lord Canning to enable him to prepare a great work on the Natural History of the Vertebrate Animals of India. An experience of almost all parts of India and British Burmah, stretching over a quarter of a century, with an ardent enthusiasm for his subject, made Dr. Jerdon the most competent man to undertake a work which has long been a desideratum. The first volume, on the Birds of India,* dedicated to Lord Elgin, is now before us. This subject will be completed in a second volume, and in time one volume on the Mammals will follow, another on Reptiles, and probably two on Fishes. Adopting Gray's division, Dr. Jerdon classifies Birds as Raptores, birds of prey; Insectores, perching birds; Gemitores, pigeons; Rasores, game birds; Gallatores, wading birds; and Natatores, swimming birds. The first writer on the Ornithological Fauna of India was Major Franklin in 1831. Colonel Sykes, in 1832, issued a Catalogue of the Birds of the Bombay Deccan. They were succeeded by numerous enquirers, up to the time of Mr. Blyth, who has assisted Dr. Jerdon in the publication of this work, and is justly spoken of as one who "by his efforts, by intercourse and correspondence, has contributed an impetus to the study of natural history, that has done more to its extension in India than all the previous publications." This volume fitly inaugurates an undertaking which promises to open the rich and hitherto almost hidden stores of Indian Natural History to the general student. The mere sportsman will find in it much to attract him.

GOVERNMENT HORSES.—The Government of India, we are informed, in consequence of very inferior and most unsuitable horses having been repeatedly sent from England to this country for stud purposes, has resolved that henceforth veterinary officers shall be sent to England at Government expense, to select sires for the studs. This simple, and not costly measure will, in the course of half-a-dozen years, effect wonders in the improvement of the stock of the studs. The great wonder is that it was not thought of and carried out long ago. The present is, however, a time of improvement, and it may yet come to happen that when stores or materials of any kind are wanting for the public service here, competent individuals will be sent to see that the precise article required shall be that sent out, and the selection not left to parties in England who know little or nothing of India, and who, it may be presumed, are sometimes expert at earning an honest penny by giving orders to comply with Indian Indents to liberal manufacturers and traders.—Delhi Gazette.—[We should like to know why an agent from India should be better informed of the quality and condition of English horses than an Englishman at home. There are quite as good judges of horseflesh—indeed, very many better—in London, than in any part of India.—Ed. A.I.M.]

STRAITS INCOME AND EXPENDITURE.—The Budget Estimates for 1862-63, lately published by the Indian Government, give the following figures for the Straits:—Income, £158,800; expenditure, £120,330; thus showing a surplus of £38,470 of income over outgoings. What has become of the deficit which we have heard so much about, and on account of which we have been victimised by the imposition of stamp duties?—Singapore Free Press.

THE NUMBER OF MISSIONARIES sent out to India has increased fifteen per cent. in the last ten years, the churches are more than three times as numerous as they were, and church members are about forty-four per cent. in advance. The scholastic statistics show a falling off in the number of boys that attend schools; while, on the other hand, the number of girls educated has considerably increased. The number of native preachers in 1852 was 496; the present number of native missionaries and catechists is 1,160. The figures in Bengal and the North-west Provinces are as follows:—

	Bengal.	N.P.W.
Missionaries (European)	113 ...	113
Ditto (Native)	17 ...	11
Catechists	189 ...	118
Churches	140 ...	73
Native Christians	20,774 ...	5,301
Communicants	4,719 ...	1,488
Boys in Schools	12,634 ...	10,940
Girls in Schools	1,977 ...	1,598

CHANGES IN THE PUNJAB.—The following moves in the Punjab official world are imminent this spring:—Mr. A. A. Roberts, Judicial Commissioner of the Punjab, will return to his post in Lahore when the Legislative Council rises. Mr. R. N. Cust will then revert to his appointment as Commissioner of Umritsur; Mr. Melvill will go back to Delhi. Lieutenant-Colonel Hamilton will return to Mooltan; and Mr. W. Ford, the last of the row of nine pins, will fall back as Deputy Commissioner of Goorgaon. Major James, Commissioner of Peshawur, returns from England in March. Lieutenant-Colonel Taylor will be deputed as Political Agent to Cashmere this year, being the first time a Commissioner has been sent, and the charge incurred will be considerable. The following Deputy Commissioners have announced their intention of re-visiting England this season:—Major Adams, of Huzarah; Major McNeile, of Loodinah; Major Busk, of Umballa; General Van Cortland, of Mooltan; Colonel Fendall, of Hissar; Captain Pollock, of Lahore. This will create a goodly crop of ek-tung appointments, or men standing goose-like, on one leg.—Lahore Chronicle.

THE 41st N.I., under command of Captain Obbard, came into Agra on the 10th of Jan. to await the arrival of his Excellency the Governor-General, and form part of his escort.

SIR JOHN LOW.—The great expectations formed of a liberal distribution of honours on the Prince of Wales arriving at his majority have been sadly disappointed, and among others not a few of the old Indian army officers, whose services have hitherto gone unnoticed, have been doomed again to further delay. It is hard upon those who have borne the heat and burden of the day to see another opportunity pass by without any recognition of a long career in the East; and the harder is it to bear when they see such numerous instances of honours being lavished where they never should have been given, and the really meritorious officer set aside, to make way for the man who may have more interest to push forward his less important claims to distinction. Among such we consider to have been General Low, and it is with much satisfaction that we see his promotion, as announced in the Gazette of Saturday, to the honour of K.C.B. Sir John Low's career of services is not unworthy of notice, and may be taken as another of those numerous instances of a young man entering the service without any particular interest to back him, forcing his way from the lowest grades to the highest offices of the State, not from any uncommon ability, but from a steady and consistent course of action, which alike commanded the respect of the native princes with whom he was so long brought in contact, and the regard of his own countrymen. Sir John Low commenced his career in the Madras army more than half a century back, and his first service of any note was that of doing duty with H.M.'s 50th Regiment during the campaign in Java in 1811, for which he received a medal. He also wears the Indian medal for Mahidpore. He early quitted the military service of Government for the diplomatic line, and reached the office of first assistant at Holkar's Court as far back as 1818. Shortly after that date he was employed in political charge of Bajee Rao, and in 1825 was appointed to act as Political Agent at Jigepore, where he remained for several years. In 1830 he was appointed Resident at Gwalior, which office he retained but a short time, having been appointed to the more highly paid, if not more important post of Resident at Lucknow. This office he retained until the end of 1842, when we believe failing health required him to visit his own country. He does not appear to have been employed in any office of importance until 1848, when we see him again in the political line as Agent in Rajpootana, where he remained until the beginning of 1853, in January of which year he was appointed Resident at Hyderabad. His next and final promotion in the service of the East India Company was his being called to the Supreme Council in September of the same year. Broken health did not permit his remaining his full term in this appointment, and he finally retired in the beginning of the year which preceded the great crisis through which our rule in this country has recently passed. The somewhat tardy recognition of so long a list of eminent services may have arisen from the very fact alluded to. So many were the claimants for honours won in the Indian mutinies, and so recent the services rendered, that men of older claims and older services were for the time set aside. As regards Sir John Low, the case might have been altogether reversed. Had the star of his destiny permitted him to remain in the councils of the country his sound understanding, combined with the immense and varied experience he possessed of the native character, might have had important influence on the acts of the Government at that momentous epoch of our Indian history. Instead of being among the last to receive these honours from her Majesty, he more probably would have been among the first to be rewarded. It is beyond the scope of this notice of Sir John Low's public services, to do more than allude to him in his private capacity. Suffice it to say that he carried the same integrity of character and honesty of purpose into private life which he so consistently and invariably displayed in his public duties. He, moreover, possessed in an unusual degree the most invaluable characteristic in whatever walk in life a man may have to tread, viz., conciliating manner and address. There must be numbers of his friends in this country who will receive with satisfaction the intelligence that his long and important services have at length been recognised and rewarded.—Hurkaru, Jan. 19.

SOANE BRIDGE.—The Allahabad Gazette publishes some interesting details regarding the Soane Bridge. It is undoubtedly the greatest engineering work at present completed in India, and reflects great credit on Mr. Power. It was begun in January 1858, and the whole of the twenty-eight girders were erected in fourteen months, or two working seasons. One girder on the west side of the river was put in place in six days. Government allowed a bonus to the inspectors of rupees 14,000, or rupees 500 for every span erected within two months. The bridge consists of twenty-seven piers and two abutments, 166 feet from centre to centre, in all 4,682 feet, nearly a mile. The piers are built on three large wells, sunk to about forty feet below the bed of the river, into a good bed of kunker. The whole length is spanned by twenty-eight girders, of 150 feet each, constructed by Sir William Armstrong. It is the first iron lattice bridge made for this country.

EAST INDIAN RAILWAY.—The Meerut and Lahore journals announce with some confidence that the East Indian railway, which will soon be opened as far as Allyghur, will pass through Meerut on its way to Umritsur instead of Delhi. It is said that it will cross the Jumna at Booriah near Sheharunpoor, and thence pass through Meerut to Ghazee-o-deen, in the vicinity of Delhi, on to Allyghur. This route will be some six or seven miles longer than the other, and a bridge over the Jumna at Booriah will be necessary, while the immense stock of vast girders and other iron work for the bridge designed to span the river at Delhi will be wasted.

EXAMINATION IN ARTS.—The results of the First Examination in Arts of the Calcutta University are not so favourable as they ought to have been. Of 220 candidates only 97 have passed, and of these only 12 in the first class, from the following colleges:—

A gradual deterioration in the Government colleges is here painfully evident, especially in Dacca and Hooghly, and Government alone is to blame for giving them so weak a staff of professors.—Friend of India, Jan. 8.

DR. BONAVIA is engaged in drawing up rules for the propagation of the mulberry tree in Oude. He has found by his own experience, and the testimony of others, that the Cashmere and China silk worms feed and thrive on the native mulberry tree as well as on any other.

MAJOR FANSHAW.—It is confidently asserted in official quarters that Major R. W. H. Fanshawe, of the Invalid Establishment, an old and experienced officer of the Postal Department, is to be appointed Postmaster-General of the Punjab, in the place of Mr. C. B. Saunders, proceeding to England on furlough.

THE DEB RAJAH of Bootan evidently needs a lesson. Letters recently received from Gowhaty inform us that that mighty potentate treated the messenger sent to him by Government, to demand an inquiry into certain outrages committed by the Booteahs, with the utmost contempt, and said publicly that he did not wish to entertain any envoy. He promised, certainly, to inquire into the aggressions complained of, but qualified the promise by expressing his belief that they had never occurred. In conclusion, he said that he would send his agent to the agent of the Governor-General of the North-East Frontier during the course of the current month, when all quarrels could be settled. If the above be a specimen of this wretched little potentate's style of addressing the Government of India, it would be as well to let the settlement, as far as he is concerned, be of a decisive character.

THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL will be at Agra on the 11th or 12th. His escort consists of a troop of Horse Artillery, a squadron of British Cavalry, a regiment of Native Cavalry, the Body Guard, a regiment of British Infantry, one of Native, and a hundred and fifty police.

A LAWYER'S WARNING.—A lawyer's advertisement appears in the Calcutta papers warning the public against purchasing at the auction sale to be held by Government in four days, two lots of waste land at Darjeeling. "The said two lots are the absolute property of the said H. Dear and C. S. Rundle, the purchase money thereof having been paid by them to Government in full, and possession thereof having been given to them." Has the dispute anything to do with Sir C. Wood's new rules?

LAHORE, Jan. 13.—A rather strange occurrence took place at the race course the other day, and one which will doubtless cause a strong feeling of hostility between the Civil and Military ranks. It appears that a member of the Sub-Medical department, not satisfied at exhibiting the greatest temerity on horse back, to the discomfort of those about the stand, commenced applying his whip on every unfortunate native he happened to come across. A Mr. B.—, who considered such conduct falling under the operation of a Section of the Act, commonly known as the Indian Penal Code, went up to the Sub-Medico and remonstrated with him; but the remonstrance was soon followed by a tussle, in which it appears the latter was rather severely handled. Upon this a crowd commenced to gather round, and Mr. B. found it expedient to retire to a carriage close by. Here he was followed by a few military friends of the Medico, whose looks evinced that they were determined to push the affair further. On this one of the inmates of the carriage, whose connection with the press made him known to all, called on an officer who happened to be near, to use his authority to prevent a breach of the peace, which appeared to be brooding, and said that should Mr. B. have committed any offence, he would be responsible for his attendance at any tribunal to which he might be eventually summoned. The officer thus addressed turned sneeringly round, and inquired of another officer if he would take that fellow's security for Mr. B.'s attendance. The gentleman first named not being accustomed to be termed a fellow, became rather indignant, and demanded how dare the red coat thus style him. The latter hereupon applied the lash, which was a signal for a spirited contest, in which, it seems, both parties were somewhat bruised. That the behaviour of the officer in question was not only uncalled for, but ungentlemanly in the highest degree, is the opinion of every one who was present when the affair occurred, and I have no doubt that if the circumstance is reported to the general commanding the division, which, I am told, will certainly be the case, the officer who could thus forget himself in a public place, such as the race-course, will be taught a lesson which will not be readily erased from his memory.—Delhi Gazette.

SIXTY MILES of the new road from Goona to Beowra is in active progress, and with the exception of two bridges will be quite finished by next rains.

SAUGOR, Dec. 13.—It is half-past nine o'clock, and the guns of the station are booming out a farewell to Mr. Temple, who goes to Gurrakota to-day, and via Dumoh and Jubbulpore expects to return to Nagpore by the 18th inst. He returned from Nowgong on Monday, the 8th, and, in a grand durbar held for the occasion at 3½ p.m., distributed prizes, scholarships, and honours to the pupils of the Saugor College. Seldom, if ever, have the boys been awarded prizes before such a large assemblage of European and native gentlemen with such grandeur and solemnity. If ever any doubts were entertained of Mr. Temple's warm and sincere attachment to the education of the several "tongues, nations, and languages" committed to his care in the Central Provinces, those doubts must have been removed that day. A prettier scene could scarcely be imagined than that presented at the durbar immediately before Mr. Temple's arrival. There were about a thousand boys assembled, belonging to the Government normal, Tehsili, and private schools of Saugor; each group of boys assembled with its teacher at distances round the durbar tent. There were, besides, about a thousand malgozars and landholders, belonging to the Saugor district, seated in various parts of the grounds, as far as the eye could see, called together to meet Mr. Temple, who desired personally to talk to them on matters concerning them and their lands. The whole area seemed decorated with the variegated and richly-coloured dresses of the crowds assembled. Some of the natives, seated on chairs immediately before Mr. Temple, were attired in grand and brilliant costumes. Nothing seemed omitted that could mark the importance placed by Mr. Temple on education. The Saugor College had been examined previously by the Director of Schools in the Central Provinces, Captain Dods, by the Inspector Mr. Browning, and by other gentlemen unconnected with the institution. For the examination of the lowest classes the director requested the assistance of the headmaster. Four students had been examined for the university entrance examination. Mr. Temple arrived on the grounds in company with his Assistant-Secretary, Mr. Rivett Carnao, at three p.m. Shortly after Mr. Temple was seated, he called upon two of the lads to read and explain portions of Goldsmith's "Deserted Village;" some essays in the vernacular were then read. After this he distributed the prizes, which were laid before him on the table, consisting of books, pen-knives, gold and silver lace caps, red turbans, &c.; to the teachers of some of the native schools turban cloths were awarded. Not a few of those who received prizes were young rajahs under the Court of Wards, and sons of talookdars, and other respectable and wealthy natives. Mr. Temple then addressed the assembly in the vernacular, commencing with Soono Talib-Ilmo! and, considering that he has been only thirteen years or so in the country, his pronunciation of the language was very good. The prizes which had been distributed, he said, were in accordance with the annual custom which had been pursued for the last twenty years in the Saugor College. The examination which had been held of that institution, was pronounced by the examiners to be, on the whole, satisfactory; the fact of one pupil having passed the Calcutta University (Madrasa-Ala) successfully last year, and four having competed for matriculation this year, was highly creditable. He was aware of the various causes that greatly impeded the progress of the institution—their bad present school house, the raising of fees, the compulsory study of English, the absence of scholarships, and other stimulants to study—but he hoped to remedy all these evils in the coming year. A new school house should be built for the one taken away for the accommodation of the troops, scholarships will also be granted, and other incentives and aids to the prosecution of their studies added. He then turned round to the residents present, and highly commended the liberal and enlightened conduct of Anunt Rao Bed, a citizen of Saugor, who had presented a large estate, with its buildings and garden, for the purpose of erecting a new school house. Such an example was worthy of being followed by others. This is a meagre sketch of an excellent and long speech. Two of the best students were promised appointments under Government. The teachers of the institution were then presented by the headmaster to Mr. Temple, who shook hands with some, and spoke kindly and encouragingly to all. This is the way to stimulate and promote education. Three elementary schools, as feeders to the Saugor College, are to be established, so as to raise the standard of the institution; but the standard of the institution can only be raised by inducing the boys not to leave it at too early an age for petty appointments in Saugor and its neighbouring districts.

H. E. THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF left Saugor on the morning of the 23th, and reached Jubbulpore on the 30th of Dec. at 8 a.m., riding and driving the whole distance 102 miles. The Chief left Jubbulpore on the 2nd of Jan., and was going about eighty miles the first day, towards Nagode. He will probably stay about two days at Allahabad, and as long at Cawnpore. He will be at Lucknow for the fancy ball on the 27th. From Lucknow his route will probably lie through Rohilkund to Meerut, and thence in company with the Governor-general to Simla. While at Saugor his Excellency was the guest of Brigadier Travers, V. C.—Delhi Gazette.

MAJOR THE HON. ROBERT BAILLIE HAMILTON, of H. M.'s 44th Regiment, in the Bombay Presidency, has come round to Calcutta, and arrived by the last P. and O. Co.'s steamer, to be an Aide-de-Camp on the personal staff of his Excellency Sir Hugh Rose, vice some of the unfortunates removed for misconduct. We should think that Major Baillie Hamilton's case will be one of those which are called in Scottish phraseology, "book again."

CASH BALANCES.—The following statement of Cash Balances, as reported up to this date, in the Government Treasuries in India, at the close of the month of November last, contrasted with that of the previous year, is published:—

CABOOL, Dec. 15.—Since the last two or three days a curious kind of fever has made its appearance in Cabool. The moment a child or a person is attacked with it, he gets into a dangerous state, and after suffering from it for six, nine, or the most twenty-four hours, he is carried off. It has proved not so fatal to grown up people as to children, because from yesterday up to this morning about twenty-four children have died of the sickness only in Bala Hissar, besides the cases that have been in the city. The hakems are quite at a loss, and do not know what kind of sickness it is. The grandson of Sirdar Mohammed Oosman Khan, who was about five years of age, died this morning. Sirdar Mohamed Allee Khan went to the Sirdar's house to read the Fataha, and left orders with his kardar to have the different kinds of eatables cooked in the Ameer's garden, and to have them distributed to the moolias and poor as charity.

CAPT. F. B. NORMAN, of the Quartermaster-general's Department, has been appointed Assistant-quartermaster-general with the head quarters camp of his Excellency the Governor-general, during his coming tour in the North-west Provinces, in the room of Lieutenant Heathcote, previously nominated, but who is unable to join from illness, and goes to England on sick certificate. His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief had nominated an officer for the appointment in the room of Lieutenant Heathcote, but the Governor-general overruled, and put in his own man, as by right empowered to do.

BAREILLY, Jan. 11.—The 3rd Battalion Rifle Brigade move into camp on the 13th, and will march en route to Agra, to form part of the Governor-general's escort, on the 15th instant, regretted by all the residents. The 104th Regiment from Meerut are expected in to-morrow to relieve the Rifles, several officers of the latter regiment are already in the station on the lookout for houses, and as there is a scarcity of such here, I fear, the officers will regret the change, especially when they find the rents are 50 per cent. higher than at Meerut, with infinitely worse accommodation here.

THE KIRWEE PRIZE.—According to the Madras Athenaeum, the claim of Sir Hugh Rose's column to participate in the Kirwee Prize has been finally decided in the negative. The question now remains to be settled, whether the prize shall be distributed between the whole of General Whitlock's column, or to that portion of it which constituted the actual captors.

NEEMUCH.—We understand that the Government has, at the recommendation of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, ordered the European regiment of infantry, hitherto stationed at Neemuch, in Central India, to be withdrawn, as the country thereabouts is in such a state of tranquillity as not to require the presence of a European corps, either for the preservation of peace and order, or as a strategic measure of precaution.

INDIAN TEAS.—We heard the other day from a gentleman interested in Indian tea cultivation, that during a recent visit to England he inquired of a retail trader whether he dealt in Indian teas. "Oh, yes," the man replied, "we purchase Indian teas." "And do you sell them?" was the next question. "Oh, no," he said, "we keep them to flavour other teas." There is a great deal implied in these few words—a great deal which it is to the interest of tea-planters to look to. The object of Indian tea-planters should be to get their tea a name in the English market. Until this is accomplished tea cultivation in India can hardly be considered a success. The only tea from this country which has acquired a name, and is sold as Indian produce, is the Assam. Other sorts of teas from tip-country factories and plantations reach England but in too small quantities as yet to make themselves felt in the market. Whatever does reach England is not sold as Indian produce, but kept by retail traders on account of the excellence of its flavour to make their China teas go off! They know the value of Indian tea; and recognise its peculiar quality of high flavour, but it suits their purpose better to mix it with tasteless insipid rubbish from China than to sell it pure. That this is done we know full well, not only from the solitary instance given above, but from other sources. Two facts, then, are clear: first, that Indian tea is so high flavoured and so good as to be used to make other tea palatable, and its value is known to the trade; and, secondly, that Indian tea will never be able to take its proper position in the English market till it has fair play. The produce of the Assam plantation is valued chiefly for its high colour, and the principal part of it is "black." That produced in the plantations in Northern India is valuable chiefly from its excessively high and rich flavour, but it is, as a rule, wanting in colour. Colour, however, is a matter of secondary importance. If necessary, it might be imparted by admixture of colouring substances; but this, we hope, will never be resorted to. Flavour cannot be imparted by any artificial means, and the great value of the tea of Northern India in this respect requires only to be sufficiently known, beyond the trade at home, for it to command a ready sale. To effect this we recommend that all Northern India tea planters and companies unite, and have an agent in London for the sole sale of Indian teas. If the Assam Company will join too so much the better for the rest, and for them also. The agent should have a shop in the City, advertise extensively, and devote himself entirely to the sale of Indian teas. Now, there need be no rivalry here. What planters should aim at is to get the value of Indian tea generally, no matter from what plantation, known and appreciated by the tea-drinking public. Let it once come into something like common use and the demand will be large and continuous; but not for the next twenty years need there be any rivalry or jealousy between different estates. At present the owners of estates require to get their boats under weigh, and they should pull altogether; once the trade is fairly started, they can do as they please, continue in company, or separate. But there should be one place, one house, where all Indian teas may be had, wholesale or retail, and then people will know where to go for it. A few words of advice to manufacturers and owners of estates may not be out of place. One great thing to be aimed at is uniformity in quality. It is perfectly useless to send home a small sample of selected teas, of peculiarly good flavour. The trade and the public too very soon find out when the samples are superior to the stock. It is far better to send an inferior sample, so it be a real sample of the whole stock, than to select a little peculiarly good and likely to prove superior to the rest. The produce of the whole year should be kept, and sorted together, instead of sending home one season's produce first, and the next afterwards, as the two season's produce will probably differ a little in quality and the advantage of uniformity will be lost. Another point is to send home as large consignments as possible. Nothing under 20,000 for 30,000 lbs. should be transmitted at a time. Of course the larger concerns only will be able to do this, and for this reason, the larger concerns have a much greater prospect of success than the smaller plantations. The latter should when possible unite their efforts, and enter into a kind of partnership, as far as mixing their teas and sending them home. This, of course, will only be feasible where the small estates adjoin one another. Where there are several small estates in the neighbourhood of a large one it will probably be found convenient for the planters to content themselves with growing the plant and selling the leaf to be manufactured in the large factory. A large concern can afford to keep up a better and more efficient establishment than a small one. The Assam Company made, we believe, last year, a million lbs. of tea. With so large a produce, and a name already high in the English market, of course they are independent of all other concerns, and might not think it worth while to join the upper India planters in the measure we have proposed. If not, we recommend the principal up-country planters to establish the agency we have suggested. When it is once set on foot all the rest will readily unite, and if proper measures are taken, an active man with good business habits, and good business connections selected for the post, and money supplied for advertising extensively, Indian teas will soon receive the attention and acquire the popularity they merit, and the fortunes of Indian tea-planters be made.—Delhi Gazette.

CLAIMS FOR MEDALS.—It appears that a Mr. James Burton and his two brothers—sons, we should suppose, of Major Burton, who was murdered during the mutiny, if we recollect rightly, at Joudpore—petitioned the Secretary of State for India, claiming the Indian medal for services during the mutiny and rebellion; and it also appears that, in consequence of their application, Sir Charles Wood has asked the Indian Government why these gentlemen were not recommended for the distinction in question. We would suggest to the Indian Government to ask Sir Charles Wood in return, why the officers and men of the Delhi army, who recommended themselves for a medal five years and a-half ago, by besieging and taking Delhi, and saving the empire, have not, up to this day, received the "distinction in question."—Englishman, Jan. 10.

FROM ALLAHABAD TO BENARES.—The greatest inconvenience imaginable is experienced by travellers coming down to Allahabad on their way to Calcutta. The demand for dak carriages to Benares has increased to such a degree that the agent of the three companies which are still in existence have increased their fares to double what used to be charged formerly. But this is not all. One company, the "United India," can seldom manage to convey the travellers they undertake to carry in less than thirty hours! and I know of two instances where travellers had to return to Allahabad after going two chowkies for want of horses, none being ready to convey them further. The run is so great that unless travellers engage a dawk some days previous to their arrival here they are not likely to leave Allahabad the moment they arrive by train from Agra. The time gained by a quick passage from Benares to Calcutta is lost entirely by the delay and inconvenience of the journey between Allahabad and Benares.—Delhi Gazette.

MEMORANDUM OF THE MOVEMENT OF TROOPS.—Three companies 71st Highland light infantry marched from Sealkote on the morning of the 3rd, under command of Lieut.-col. G. Rich, en route to join regimental head-quarters at Nowshera. The 7th (the Queen's own) hussars, under command of Lieut.-col. Scudamore, C.B., marched past the citadel of Lahore on Monday morning, en route from Umballa to Peshawur. The 20th hussars, under command of Colonel Stannus, marched from Umritsur on the 5th inst., en route to Sealkote. The 2nd regiment native light infantry arrived at Mooltan on the 1st January.

THE COSSYAH HILL DISTURBANCES.—The following telegram has been received by the Government of Bengal from the scene of hostilities in the Cossyah Hill country:—"From Paddo through Dacca.—From Capt. Morton to Calcutta.—To Secretary to the Government of Bengal.—Jan. 6th: Oomkronk stockade carried yesterday, stronger than Oonikar. Artillery of good use. Richardson and two men wounded, two officers and eight men slightly wounded. Heavy marks of blood on the track of the rebels; their loss supposed heavy."

DEATH OF LIEUT. BROCKMAN.—We regret to record the death of Lieut. C. F. Brockman, 1st Battalion, 4th King's Own Regiment, on Wednesday evening last. The remains will be buried this morning. Lieut. Brockman was promoted from the ranks to the 4th King's Own, on the formation of the 2nd Battalion of the regiment. He was very popular with the men, and his loss is deeply regretted by all.—Deacon Herald, Jan. 16.

SERIOUS AFFRAY BETWEEN MILITARY OFFICERS AND THE POLICE.—A party of officers, six in number, left Poona by the 9 A.M. train on Thursday last for Khandalla, with the view of visiting the railway works on the Ghaut. Mr. Tate, the resident engineer, placed a lorry at their disposal from 2 P.M. In passing through the bazaar on their way to the conveyance some ghorawallahs, from within the chowkey compound, called out that they had been made prisoners, that they were in charge of horses belonging to officers of H.M.'s 95th Regiment, and that, unless they were speedily released, they would lose the train which was to convey them to Bombay. They entreated interference. As the case was urgent, one of the party, Captain T., went to the foudjar's office, and asked if they could not be released. The foudjar promised to send for the complainant, and upon this, accompanied by Captains D. and S., proceeded onwards, and at a distance of some 250 or 300 yards, halted to allow their companions to join them. After a lapse of some ten minutes, their attention was aroused by hearing the sound of a disturbance going on behind them. Captain T. at once returned, and pushing into the crowd, found that the police and others, armed with sticks, were attacking the three remaining officers of the party. They at once called upon them to desist, pointing out that, if they had been interfered with it was their duty to report the occurrence, and not to act as they were then doing; but suddenly, while he was speaking, a native struck Lieut. B. a severe blow with a stick, and the row recommenced, the policemen crowding to the spot with fixed bayonets. Mr. Tate, who appears to have been in no way concerned in the matter, suffered most severely; his arms were pinioned behind his back, and his head laid open by a murderous stroke from a lattee. It is doubtful whether he will recover. The foudjar having arrived on the spot, the whole party proceeded in the direction of the house of Mr. Harrison, the magistrate. On the way they wished to place Mr. Tate, who was faint and bleeding freely, in a small tavern, but the police urged them forward. On their arrival there complaints were lodged against the foudjar and police by the officers, and this worthy and six of the latter were made prisoners. This matter is too serious to rest here, and therefore we content ourselves with remarking, that we have every reason to believe that the officers were free from blame, but even if they were not, we cannot find words sufficiently strong to express our disapprobation of the cruel and brutal manner in which they were treated by the police.—Deccan Herald, Jan. 19. We regret to hear that the injuries received by Mr. Tate in the recent affray with the police at Khandalla, are more serious than was at first believed. He is, however, in good medical hands; and we trust that with their skill, and the aid of Providence, he will soon be restored to health.—Deccan Herald, Jan. 21.

NEILGHERRY TEA.—"Your advertising columns invite the support and views of the public on the formation of a Neilgherry Tea Company. This is the third concern of the kind attempted within the last six months. One fact is beyond dispute, that the tea hitherto produced on the Neilgherries is rank poison, just the sort of stuff, in fact, that one would recommend to an old aunt from whom he had large expectations. Now, as to the cause of this objectionable flavour opinions differ; some say it is the fault of the curing and manipulating processes; others, the inherent quality of the trees, which are not of a good kind; and others, again, are not far out probably in laying the blame on the unsuitable elevation. One thing is evident, that by far the larger proportion of tea seed produced at the upper elevation does not germinate, thereby evincing a want of vigour in the plant from some cause or other; whilst, on the other hand, the seed of the tea at the elevation of 3,500 or 4,000 feet germinates freely, with only about ten per cent. failures. At present, the so-called tea plantations appear failures. In support of your theory as to the value of land, it may be mentioned that one of our land jobbers here has just sold a block of 1,000 acres for £4,000, being £4 an acre, and this, moreover, liable to assessment."—Communicated to the "Times of India."

TRAMWAY UP THE GHATS TO OOTACAMUND.—It is reported, with what truth I know not, that it is in contemplation to make a tramway up the Ghats the whole way to Ootacamund. Such an undertaking would be very expensive, and could not by any means pay. As a commercial or producing district, the Neilgherries occupy a very low place, and two railway goods waggons daily would bring up and take down all the traffic that could afford such an expensive style of conveyance. What is really required is a tramway to the foot of the Ghaut, and a good omnibus up the Ghaut drawn by good cattle with short stages. From Goonoor to Ooty the distance has been repeatedly driven up in one hour forty minutes, and down within the hour, but the ordinary rate of the wretched transit coaches is five or six hours.—Times of India.

CRIMINAL SESSIONS.—The first criminal sessions of the High Court for the current year commenced on Tuesday, the 6th inst., and terminated on Saturday last. There were no cases of importance in the calendar, if we except that of Ensign F. Knight, H.M.'s 69th Regiment of Foot, who stood indicted for forging and cheating; which heavy charge he brought upon himself by an act of culpable boyish folly, in giving a fictitious name and address, when taking a book from the lending library of a native bookseller. The grand jury threw out the bill, with general approval, as in effect directed by the presiding judge, Sir Adam Bittlestone, who could not accept the presumption of intentional fraud from all the circumstances of the affair. We think his lordship was right, but Mr. Knight played a very suspicious and dangerous prank, nor do we see how the committing magistrate could have done otherwise than he did, looking at the scope of the Penal Code section relative to such matters. Another case of considerable interest and importance, in connection with missionary work in India as affected by the same Code, has recently occupied the time of one of our police courts and the attention of the public, but we may briefly here say, that a native father charged the Rev. Mr. Jenkins, of the Wesleyan Mission, with having kidnapped his son, he being (as stated) under fourteen years of age, with the view of converting him to Christianity. After a patient hearing the case entirely broke down; the medical evidence produced as to the boy's age showing him to be about sixteen years old, and therefore a free agent. He used his freedom to forsake his family, and throw his lot with the missionaries. Ten or fifteen years ago a matter of the kind would have created a much greater sensation among the caste native community than almost any amount of conversions could do now. The members of that community have grown wiser, and value the secular advantages of cheap Missionary education sufficiently to make them run the hazard of proselytism.—Madras Athenæum, Jan. 14.

SAVINGS BANKS FRAUDS.—The death of a Mr. Clark, actuary of the Madras Government Savings Bank, has brought to light a series of frauds which lately formed the subject of an official investigation by Mr. R. S. Ellis. It appears that Clark was in the habit of defrauding the poorer class of depositors who could not read nor write, and of forging certificates and entries. The defalcations amount to at least Rs. 9,926. Government have agreed to become responsible, but all the subordinate officers of the bank have been dismissed for not bringing the suspicious conduct of the late actuary to notice.

FRENCH LINE OF STEAMERS.—The expected benefits which the Anglo-Indian public were long promised as the results of the establishment of the French line of steamers have grown small by degrees and beautifully less, till now they only amount to the additional accommodation which those vessels will supply during the crowded season. We expressed our conviction when the Line was first mooted, that if it became a reality, two great companies would not be two such great fools as to ruin themselves by competition for the benefit of the public, and that even if they did, the public would ultimately have to bear the loss. We learn now from the report of the Peninsular and Oriental Co.'s directors, that the commercial entente cordiale was not long in being established, and that the Messageries Impériales Company have expressed their intention of working in perfect accord with the English Company.—Madras Athenæum.

COTTON.—The Madras correspondent of the Bombay Times of India says the acreage under cotton this season exceeds the amount last year in Tinnevely by 40,000 acres, in Kurnool by 41,000 acres, in Kistna by 27,000 acres, and elsewhere by 10,000 acres; whilst in Coimbatore there has been a decrease of 37,000 acres, owing to the want of rain, and the transference of land hitherto employed for cotton to the production of cereals. Sir W. Denison is described as "a mild, affable gentleman, very portly and mediocre in appearance, attached to his gun, and fond of his horse, and he has the negative merit of having made no great mistakes."

BOMBAY.

BRANCH RAILWAY.

The Government of India has forwarded, for the information of the Government of Bombay, copies of correspondence with the Government of Bengal, and of conditions approved of by the Government of India for the construction of branch railways on certain roads in Bengal.

We have received a copy of this official paper, which we have read with much satisfaction. A company has been formed in London—The India Branch Railway Company—with a board of directors composed of gentlemen of high standing, with the Marquis of Tweeddale as its chairman, and with a large capital that has all been subscribed, for the purpose of extending the principle of light railways for all India. The company has appointed J. E. Wilson, Esq., C.E., as their chief resident engineer and agent in India; and has authorised him to enter into negotiations with the Government of India for the construction of such lines, on all roads, completed, in progress, or intended, when his Excellency in Council would consider such undertakings to be of advantage to the country. Mr. Wilson visited the Continent for the purpose of studying the light railways that are to be found in use there, for public as well as private purposes, as well as all improvements in railways generally having for object economy in construction, working, or material. By this study he was convinced of the feasibility of light railways, and of the advantage and success that would attend their application to India. He found tramways entirely exploded, and no longer in use for even the commonest industrial purposes.

Another company of a similar character has also been formed—The Indian Tramway Company (Limited). The board of directors in London deputed Mr. Forde, C.E., to visit India in behalf of the company, with the view of obtaining such terms from the Governor-general in Council as would enable it to raise the capital. This company desires the following terms from Government:—

1. Land Free Clause.
2. Materials free of duty.
3. Protection from competition.
4. Accounts audited by Government.
5. No interference until profits arrive at 15 per cent. per annum, and then traffic kept down to that.
6. Provisional subvention in one sum, or annually of a sum of money equal to that which would otherwise be incurred in the making and maintenance of a good road.

7. This annual grant or subvention to cease upon each line of tramway so soon as it shall have yielded for two consecutive years a net profit exceeding 5 per cent.

The Governor-general in Council has given his best attention to the important subject involved in the proposals of these companies, and has expressed his desire that all proper consideration should be shown to them, and all proper encouragement given to them in carrying out such works; but he does not deem it expedient to make any general offers of assistance to railway projectors at large, or to state any specific terms on which Government would in all cases undertake to co-operate with capitalists for such purposes.

In order to secure uniformity in the agreements which the local Governments may enter into for the construction of specific lines, the Governor-General in Council has caused the draft of the conditions of the first agreement with the Branch Railway Company to be prepared under the direction of the Government of India; and has stated that it will be greatly conducive to convenience if the same form of agreement is adopted as far as practicable in all cases, introducing only such changes as the special terms of each case require.

While the Government of India thinks it most expedient to deal with all such proposals on their individual merits, yet there are some general points relating to them on which his Excellency in Council has expressed his views. These are as follows:—In the first place his Excellency thinks that the provisions necessary for securing the safety of the public, and the protection of private rights, whether in the original construction or in the subsequent working of the railway; the enforcement of the by-laws of the Company; the delegating to them of authority to levy fares and tolls approved for their tariff, and to enable them to obtain land, may be more properly dealt with by an Act of the Legislature than by a contract between the company and the Government.

The Government, acting on behalf of the public, must also, when agreeing to the construction of any railway, exercise a certain control over the determination of the exact line taken; and this power may be usefully exercised in deterring speculators from embarking in schemes that might prove ruinous to them, and so hinder the prospects of a further extension of railways by private enterprise. Under no circumstances could it be right to give anything like monopoly right in any particular district to the projectors of any line; and the claims of projectors to consideration in respect to future extensions, could, it is believed, be sufficiently protected by the provisions of the general act.

In consideration of the special powers and privileges which are either directly or indirectly given to the proprietors of a railway by the law, Government may justly claim some power of control in behalf of the public as regards the tariff. Either a maximum might be fixed once for all at first, or a power reserved to the Government of reducing the rates under prescribed conditions, as, for instance, after a certain maximum profit had been realized.

The nature and extent of the assistance to be given by the Government can only be properly determined in each case on its own merits. All such aid from the State, as the value of it might be reduced to a pecuniary equivalent, is in truth of the nature of a subsidy, varying in its amount and in its inconvenience; and there seems no reason for rejecting one form and accepting another, unless on the ground of the results being either financially or generally inconvenient.

There are several things for which the General Government would desire to stipulate—the free conveyance of mails; reduced rates of transport for troops, police, and public stores; the right, where land is given free of cost, of a ground landlord to re-enter and to take possession of the works fixed to the soil, either in case of the company not completing its contract, or, on the lapse of the term for which the concession was made; the power to purchase on stated terms.

All charges on account of such railways must be provided for in the Public Works Budget under the head of "Railway," and no special pecuniary grants from Imperial Funds are to be anticipated on their account either now or hereafter. Railways, in fact, are roads of a superior order, and the funds necessary for meeting charges arising from the construction of ungarnanteed lines of railway must be met by economy in the sums heretofore set apart for the construction and maintenance of common roads.

It is most gratifying to know that solid companies have been formed for the promotion of projects which promise to be of such immense benefit to India if carried out on a large scale. It is as gratifying to know that the Government of India has met the proposals of these companies in a liberal spirit. We may expect, in the course of a few years, to have a system of branch railways communicating all the advantages of the Grand Trunk lines to every important agricultural district of the interior. The whole country will then be within reach of the best markets, and the greatest inducement which the Government can give will thus be afforded for the development of its various resources.—Bombay Gazette.

COTTON GIN FACTORY IN DHARWAR.

Government has done good service in publishing, within a few days of the date of its resolution upon, the report of the cotton gin factory in the Dharwar Collectorate with letters from the Revenue Commissioner, S. D., and Surgeon-Major Forbes, superintendent of the factory at Dharwar.

These letters relate to that all engrossing subject on the Indian cotton trade—the adulteration of the staple. In forwarding Dr. Forbes's letter, Mr. Hart quotes from an unpublished letter of Mr. Gordon, the acting collector of Dharwar, as follows:—

"I take this opportunity of stating my conviction of the necessity for speedily applying some remedy for the evils which the wholesale adulteration of the Dharwar grown exotic cotton will certainly produce.

"I am sure that a moderately stringent law could be worked successfully and without oppression, and if its operation were restricted to three years, I think all the objects for which we contend would have been secured.

"Every rise in price causes an increase of adulteration; accordingly I have been told that the cotton sold during the past season was much of it execrable.

"So far has it now gone that neither native merchant nor cultivators can be seriously blamed; pure seed can hardly be procured, and year after year the proportion of inferior cotton increases.

"The fact is that anything that can be called cotton is readily saleable at the highest market rate. I know that rejected samples are almost invariably instantly resold without loss. Both the cultivators and the native merchants have thus a direct and immediate interest in increasing the adulteration.

"It is unreasonable to expect these men to look forward beyond the present time; but there can be no doubt that the course they are pursuing will end in destroying the trade, and when a fall of prices does take place they must suffer severely.

"In my opinion nothing but the direct interference of Government can prevent this. European agency cannot prevent it, for the agents must execute the orders they receive, and must buy the best cotton they can procure in the market. The mere personal influence of the collector and his assistants cannot affect the present enormous trade, though it was, no doubt, sufficient in its earlier stages. A rise of prices tends rather to increase adulteration."

In these remarks it would seem Mr. Hart concurs. He says:—"I fear that the only European agents that we can expect to undertake business in the markets of the Dharwar cotton country are agents of the cotton merchants, who will buy to sell again, and not the agents of the manufacturers, whose only object it would be to obtain the staple best suited to their purposes. Were the manufacturers or their agents to enter the markets at the place of production, I have little doubt that the cultivation of inferior cotton in lands capable of growing the best would be completely checked, and the adulteration of the superior sort be put an end to. But notwithstanding that one of the latest books on political economy condemns the ordinary maxim of merchants that 'their legitimate function is to buy in the cheapest market and sell in the dearest, in obedience to the law of supply and demand,' by declaring that it is but the function of rats and other base animals to support themselves by having regard only to laws of demand and supply, and 'that the distinction of humanity is to live by those of right; and though the author of the same book, in defining the duty of a merchant, holds that one of the two cardinal points of that duty is to ensure 'the perfectness and purity of the thing provided' by him, 'so that rather than consent to any deterioration, adulteration, or unjust' and exorbitant price of that which he provides, he is bound to meet fearlessly any form of distress, poverty, or labour which may, through maintenance of these points, come upon him,' I see too much reason to fear that the agent of a merchant (of whatever nation) who buys to sell again will, if he finds that he can make more money profit by dealing in rubbish than in pure cotton, consider himself bound rather by what the author quoted above regards as the instinct of rats than by what he holds up as the duty of man." So it seems we must have more laws for putting down this adulteration in cotton. By all means, let us have them. We wish for more good from them than we expect, but shall throw no farther obstacle in the way. The letter of Dr. Forbes is altogether so interesting that we have resolved to reprint it entire, and to-morrow it shall appear.—Bombay Gazette.

MISCELLANEOUS.

PRESENTATION OF THE VICTORIA CROSS TO MAJOR R. H. KEATINGE, POLITICAL AGENT IN KATTYWAR.—This interesting spectacle took place on the evening of the 13th instant, as appointed, on the ground in the immediate vicinity of the Band Stand on the Esplanade. The entire troops now in Bombay under their respective commanding officers were marched to, and arrived on the ground shortly before five o'clock, and were drawn up in line of contiguous quarter distance columns. The usual arrangements in the formation of a like parade having been gone through, and Brigadier Liddell having dismounted in front of the parade, proceeded with the ceremony of investing the gallant Major with the token of her Majesty's appreciation of his distinguished bravery and gallant services. The Commandant of the Garrison then read in an audible and clear voice the following official notification of Major Keatinge's services:—"Major Richard Harte Kea-tinge, Bombay Artillery (now of the Staff Corps), Political Agent, Namar, Bombay.—Having rendered most efficient aid at the assault of Chundairees in India in voluntarily leading the column through the breach, which was protected by a heavy cross fire, he was one of the foremost to enter, and was severely wounded in the breach. The column was saved from a serious loss that would probably have resulted, but for Major Keatinge's knowledge of the small path leading across the ditch, which had been examined during the night by himself and a servant, who declined, when required, to lead the column without his master. Having cleared the breach, he led into the fort, where he was struck down by another dangerous wound. The Commander-in-Chief in India states that the success at Chundairees was mainly owing to this officer, whose gallantry, really brilliant, he considers was equalled by his ability and devotion. Major Keatinge was at the time a political officer with the 2nd Brigade of the Central India Field Force." The fastening of the Honour on the breast of its distinguished recipient then followed, after which the Brigadier, in an earnest and cordial address, congratulated him upon his proud and distinguished position on the occasion. His Excellency, Sir Bartle Frere, warmly shaking his hand, in a few but graceful words, expressed the happiness he felt; but the even more to be appreciated honour awaited him of receiving the felicitations of Lady Frere, who, stepping forward, gracefully and warmly added her congratulations to those of others. The ceremony at this moment assumed an interest it is scarcely possible to describe, and the parade may be said to have been one of the most brilliant which has been seen of its kind, in which the whole of the military, staff, and gentry of Bombay were present, and in which also the usual scanty attendance of the fair sex was for once an exception. This adds another laurel to the Bombay Artillery, to which Major Keatinge belongs. The troops having marched round in review order, the ceremony terminated.

DESTRUCTION OF COTTON CROPS.—KHANDISH, Dec. 31.—In your issue of the 13th inst. I read in the letter of a correspondent, that in the neighbourhood of Dhoolia the cotton crop had been attacked, and much of it destroyed, by insects. Unfortunately, the same may be said of the talooka of Wurrungome, where, as far as I have seen, not a field has escaped. The vermin have not only, to a great extent, destroyed the cotton, but the "toorie" (a pulse eaten by the natives) is also nearly all gone; not a field has escaped. Previously the crops were most luxuriant and promising, the plants thick in the ground, the branches like young trees, and well laden with pods, and but for the above cause there would have been a most abundant yield. The "toorie" crop gone, the destructive visitors are now eating up all else they can. I enclose two pods of the "toorie" as specimens of the manner in which the crops have been operated on by these insects.—Times of India.

TWO PERSONS KILLED BY A TIGER.—We regret to learn that the man (a Hindoo) who was so severely injured by the tiger at Mahim, on Sunday, Jan. 25, has since died in the Jamsetjee Jeejeebhoy Hospital. A woman, who accidentally came in its way and was wounded by its claws on the right side, also died from the effects of these wounds at Mahim; and a man, who fell from a toddy tree which he had climbed in his alarm that the tiger would lay hold of him, is now lying dangerously ill in the hospital, one of his legs being frightfully lacerated, and the thigh bone severely fractured. One or two other persons have been slightly wounded by the tiger, but are in no danger. Mr. Raddle, the chief constable of Mahim, finding that none of the people had fire arms with which to kill such a ferocious beast, sent over to Bandora for some men of the Tanna Rangers, who are all armed with fusils; and shortly after they came, one of them, named Rama Suddoo, turned the tiger over at the second shot, which penetrated the brain and killed it on the spot. It proved to be one of the largest sized royal tigers ever seen in this part of the country, and measured fifteen feet from the snout to the tip of the tail, upwards of three feet and a half high at the shoulder, and seventeen inches round the fore-arm. The skin, which is in a most beautiful condition, is in the possession of Mr. Forjett, the Commissioner of Police, and after it has been properly tanned it will in all probability be sent for exhibition to the Central Museum. The brave sepoy of the Tanna Rangers who made the monster bite the dust will, it is hoped, be rewarded as he deserves to be. The usual reward for killing tigers in the jungles is, we believe, only twenty-five rupees per head; but it is quite a different affair when a man comes forward to save the population of a town from the ravage of such a beast, and the reward under such circumstances should be at least doubled. In addition to which we would suggest that the residents of Mahim should make up a small purse to be presented to their preserver, who, we are informed, behaved with the greatest coolness and courage on the occasion.

DINNER TO INDIAN NAVAL OFFICERS.—It is, we understand, in contemplation to give a dinner at the Byculia Club to the principal officers of the Indian Navy, to the officers of the Severn, and to Captain Laporterie and the officers of the French transport ship Japon, now in dock in Bombay. Such a compliment is due to the Indian Navy before we take leave of it altogether; and as regards the other proposed guests, we cannot but welcome any sign of the awakening of Bombay to a sense of the duty of hospitality it owes to distinguished strangers.—Bombay Saturday Review, Jan. 17.

RAJPOOTANA, Jan. 8.—I fear we shall have to go out to Salumbhar yet, and make a campaign against wretched Bheels and Meenas. Troops of them are collecting all over the country, ready for loot and rapine, and I fear a long harassing hole and corner little war will be the result. For what, but that the chief of Oodeypoor (the younger branch of the family) should see the older chief of Salumbhar kotow to him, is the object of the war? Salumbhar is a place of no strength, I hear, and the only difficulties the force will meet will be thieves of the expertest description. Public opinion is much against us in this matter, I believe, and it is very absurd that we can't leave these wretched rajas to settle their questions of precedence themselves.—Times of India.

SIR W. MANSFIELD.—AHMEDABAD, Jan. 6.—The last news respecting the tour of Sir W. Mansfield is that on the 31st ult. he had reached Puttun, thirty miles out of his way to Deesa, whither he had proceeded to meet his Highness Khundoo Rao, Guicowar of Baroda. A durbar was held by the Guicowar for the reception of the chief, his staff, and the political on the 1st instant, and after it was over they were entertained at a sumptuous feast, for the preparation of which the services of the chief's cuisine were called into requisition. The whole affair was grand, and passed off to universal satisfaction.—Bombay Gazette.

PRIZE FOR THE CULTIVATION OF COTTON.—Only two competitors in all Bombay have appeared for the prize offered by Government for the cultivation of a certain area with varieties of cotton. One was a Mr. Bethcome, and the other several ryots in Poona. The Local Chamber of Commerce report that Mr. Bethcome's samples of Kapass cotton do not deserve any recompense, and they leave it to Government to say whether in other respects as to area he has complied with the published conditions so as to entitle himself to the prize. The truth is, agriculturists have been too busy and rich in Bombay this last cotton season to think of Government prizes.

H. M. FRIGATE "SEVERN," 51 guns, bearing the blue pennant of Commodore Montresor, commanding the squadron in the Indian seas, anchored in our harbour on Tuesday morning. The same day the Commodore landed and paid an official visit to the Commander-in-Chief of the Indian Navy. The courtesy was returned on the following day by Commodore Frushard, who on leaving the Severn was saluted with eleven guns, the Ajdaha in return saluting Commodore Montresor's flag with nine guns. Etiquette having been thus satisfied, civilities and hospitalities in abundance have since been interchanged, and, judging by the eagerness with which Bombay society is rushing to hail the rising sun, we may infer that the officers of the Severn are likely to be, as they well deserve, the lions of the season. The Severn, which is one of the new "crack" frigates of the Royal Navy, and carries as part of her heavy armament five 100-pounder Armstrongs and eight of smaller calibre, brought out, in addition to her own crew, the newly appointed officers and crew and the new armament of the Pantoloon. The latter vessel, which is now ready for sea, has been transferred to the Indian station, and will soon proceed to Kurrachee and the Persian Gulf, to relieve the Hornet, which has finished its period of service in these seas. Commodore Montresor's command extends, we believe, over the seas on both sides of India, as far as Singapore on the east, and Aden on the west. As the house formerly occupied by the Commander-in-Chief of the Indian Navy has been placed at the disposal of the Commodore, it may be presumed that Bombay, and not, as was at one time believed, Trincomalee or Calcutta, will be the head-quarters of the squadron.—Bombay Saturday Review, Jan. 17.

BY THE GOVERNOR IN COUNCIL.

RETRENCHMENT.

Military Dept., Bombay Castle, Jan. 8.—No. 7.—The following G.O. by the Govt. of India, No. 1,114, dated Dec. 16, 1862, is republished:—

1. As some misapprehension is believed to exist with respect to the competency of the head of a department, the accounts of which are controlled by the military finance department, to remit a retrenchment made by one of the examiners on account of departmental expenditure of any kind, H.E. the Gov. gen. in Council is pleased to notify that the controller of military finance alone has the power of remitting such a retrenchment, on sufficient explanation being afforded to warrant the charge being passed under existing rules.

2. But, as the opinion of the head of the department must have great weight with the controller, the reply to the retrenchment should be sent through the former, who will forward it to the controller, with such remarks as he may deem necessary.

3. Whenever the officer retrenched wishes the case to be submitted to Government, in the event of the controller not feeling justified in remitting the retrenchment himself, he should state this in the reply, which the controller will, in that case, submit for the orders of Government in the usual way.

This order is applicable to the three Presidencies.

CIRCULAR ORDER OF THE BOARD OF REVENUE,
L. P.

From H. L. Dampier, Esq., Secretary to the Board of Revenue, to the Officiating Secretary to the Government of Bengal.

Fort William, 25th Nov., 1862.

Sir,—I am directed by the Board of Revenue to report on a letter from the secretary to the Landholders' and Commercial Association, to your address, dated the 3rd inst., as required by your endorsement No. 2,787 of the 18th inst.—[W. J. Allen, A. Grote, and E. T. Trevor, Esqrs.]

2. The association has, in the opinion of the board, shown good cause for an alteration in supplementary rule F. With his honour's sanction the board will modify the rule and direct the sales to be held on the 2nd of each month, or on the first day after that date on which the collector's office may be open, unless the collector shall, with the sanction of the commissioner, for special reasons, fix a later date in the month, notification of which shall be given at least a month before the later date is fixed.

3. The second part of the letter of the association prays for a modification of Supplementary Rule N. His honour will observe that the board have in this rule adopted the expression made use of in your letter No. 2,338, dated 10th ultimo, directing the present reservation of "all forest lands, that is to say, lands on which valuable timber is growing." The arguments advanced by the association are of much weight and a strict adherence to Supplementary Rule N. as it stands, which interfere to a considerable and unnecessary extent with the immediate allotment of grants. But there is an obvious difficulty in laying down any general rule defining what lands shall be reserved as being covered with "valuable" timber until the local officers have drawn up their registers of waste lands after full local inquiry. The superintendent of Darjeeling has already addressed the board on this difficulty. They recommend that, until the registers be prepared, a discretion be left to the commissioner (and in Darjeeling to the board) to sell land, although covered with the more valuable description of timber, on their being satisfied that the reservation of the tracts in question is not necessary for the object which the Government have in view.

4. Mr. Grote is of opinion that the guarantee held out by rule 22 of the Government notification of the 30th August last does not admit of any exceptional treatment under Supplementary Rule N. of lands which have been applied for, and for which the applications have been duly registered under the resolution of the Government of India, dated 17th October, 1861. His colleagues, however, are clearly of opinion that paragraphs 23 and 24 of the resolution of the 17th October, 1861, and rule 21 of the notification of the 30th of August last, leave the Government free to reserve any required land under whatever rules it may have been applied for.

5. The enclosure of your endorsement is returned.

I have, &c.,
(Signed) H. L. DAMPIER, Sec.

INDIAN NAVY.—A circular has been issued by the Marine Department, India-office, stating that the Medical Board appointed for the purpose of examining and reporting upon the state of health of those officers of the Indian navy who are desirous of capitalising all or any portion of their pensions will meet at the India-office on Wednesday, the 25th of February, at one o'clock p.m.; and at the same hour on Wednesday in each of the four succeeding weeks, if there should be any officers then ready for examination. Officers who have not volunteered for other service in India will be referred to the Medical Board, on their stating in writing on which of the above-mentioned days it will be convenient for them to appear before the Board, and the exact portion of the pension it is intended to commute; and the amount allowed will be issued immediately after the receipt by the Secretary of State in Council of a satisfactory report from the Board. Any officer may commute for a sum of money a smaller portion of his pension than the full amount authorised by the despatch of the 28th of November last, but no application for the privilege will be entertained unless preferred within twelve months from the last named date.—Home News.

FRIDAY, February 20, 1863.

INDIAN ARMY PETITIONS TO PARLIAMENT.

ON Friday, the 13th inst., the Earl of Ellenborough, who has always exhibited great partiality and kindness towards the Indian army, and who, when Governor-general of India, seemed ambitious to be regarded as peculiarly "the soldier's friend," even at the risk of exciting the envy and discontent of the Civil Service, presented many petitions from Indian officers complaining of the loss of certain advantages guaranteed to them by Parliament two years ago. They represented the various ways in which, according to their own views, the pledge given by Parliament had been unfulfilled—that pledge having promised to secure to them all their old pay, pension, promotions, allowances, and privileges in any plan which might be adopted for the reorganisation of the Indian army. The Earl of Ellenborough was quite correct in his observation that economy ought to have no voice where the question was altogether one of justice, though we do not think the observation was at all necessary to the occasion, for no one charges the authorities with an intention of ignoring the rights of the army for the sake of saving a few pounds to the revenue. If any injustice has been done it has rather been the result of oversight or inadvertency of new arrangements so extensive and complicated as almost necessarily involved some unanticipated results in matters of detail. The leading complaint seemed to be that the promotion of officers had been in several ways impeded by the reorganisation. The petitioners represented that they were not permitted conformably with their ancient rights to succeed to every vacancy created by retirement. "When," said Lord Ellenborough, "in February, 1861, the Government offered as a bonus an additional annuity of £50 to field officers willing to retire from the service, it allowed the promotions to take place in the case of every vacancy so created. Six months later it was found that that offer produced only fifty-six applicants, and the Government increased its terms so largely that in some cases the annuity offered was eleven times, and in no case was it less than four times, greater than the original amount; but then, although promotion was still given in the case of majors and captains, it was refused in the case of one-half the lieutenant-colonels. Now, however inconvenient it might be that the whole of these lieutenant-colonels should be replaced by officers coming forward by promotion, still he apprehended that it was altogether inconsistent with the ancient rights of officers in the Indian service, and with the Act of Parliament which maintained those rights, that they should not have enjoyed the whole of the promotions opened up by the retirement of the lieutenant-colonels." However, even Lord Ellenborough did not seem to feel quite sure of the justice of the cause he had undertaken. There was another grievance, he said, arising out of the new regiments into which officers had been invited to volunteer—namely, that promotion was not granted, as the complainants thought it ought to be, in consequence of the transfer of officers from their former regiments to the new ones. "He was not able," he said, "to give a decided opinion upon this subject. It was one, he thought, of some doubt; but what he desired was that a committee or commission should be appointed to consider the subject. He thought the case at all events required fair and deliberate inquiry."

The Duke of Argyll said, in reply, that he had anxiously considered whether the grievances of the Indian officers were just or not, and had come to the conclusion that there was not a shadow of ground for their complaint that the guarantees of the Act of Parliament had been violated. He insisted that the officers of the old Company had been dealt with in a large and liberal spirit. Every one of the officers of the reduced regiments was put not on half but on full pay. So far from the great change in the transfer of the Company's army to the Crown having injured the officers, it had immensely accelerated their promotion. Every field officer and half the captains were permitted to retire on full pay, with an estimated value for the prospect of promotion and full term of allowances. Not less than 270 officers accepted those conditions. The retirement of these officers assisted the promotion of the rest. Many officers had gained from forty to fifty steps thereby. The reduction of the number of colonelcies had been complained of. But a new rule had recently been adopted, providing that all lieutenant-colonels, after they had served twelve years, should be in a position to become entitled to regimental services.

The Duke of Cambridge said that if at any time any considerable reduction should be made in the British army, he only hoped that the same liberality would be shown to them that had been shown in the case of the Indian officers. He quite admitted that our old Indian officers well deserved the liberality with which they had been treated.

The Duke of Argyll added that an order had been sent out to India that in no case should an officer be transferred from the staff to the command of a regiment in supercession of any other officer who had been doing regimental duty. The general impression seems to be that the Indian army as a body has been dealt with most liberally; but this does not militate against the fact that there may be several cases of great individual hardship which were in no respect anticipated, and for which, therefore, there was no especial remedy provided. These exceptional cases, we think, ought to be dealt with in a manner in keeping with the general spirit pervading the main plan of the new arrangements.

MR. LAING AND THE CONTRACT LAW.

MR. S. LAING, the Indian ex-Chancellor of the Exchequer, has written a letter to the Times, which occupies upwards of a column of that paper. It is on the subject of the lately proposed contract law for India. Mr. Laing commences his letter with a statement that he is induced by a feeling of respect to Lord Canning's memory to comment on the address to Sir Charles Wood, signed by so many noblemen and gentlemen of influence and distinction. He explains what he thinks were the real intentions of the late Governor-general when he gave his support to a law which, according to the manifesto against it, was "an instrument of extortion and oppression, open to the greatest abuse, and certain to lead to greater injustice and to far greater evils than any which now exist." Lord Canning, Mr. Laing truly says, was held in veneration by the natives of India as the man who, amid obloquy and reproach, tempered justice with mercy, and stood in the breach between them and the excited feelings of the European community at the time of the mutiny. For the sake of the people of India and the cause of humanity he patiently and boldly endured for a long time the pitiless pelting of a storm of hatred, indignation, calumny and ridicule from his own countrymen. He only just lived long enough to live down that injustice. His sun came out bright and cloudless at its setting. Mr. Laing is anxious to show that Lord Canning and his colleagues, Sir Bartle Frere and Mr. Cecil Beadon, were actuated by the best motives in proposing the contract law. No one questions their good intentions; but legislators with the best possible intentions may sometimes concoct or suggest the worst possible laws. If Mr. Laing be right, Lord Canning and his Council acted under the impression that lax legislation only tempted the poor and not very high-principled ryot to the evasion or breach of contracts, and that stricter laws would make him less prone to enter into engagements that he had little chance of fulfilling, or would force upon him the habit of doing his utmost to meet the claims upon him fairly and fully; and that a great blow would be struck at the old system of vague contracts running on for indefinite periods if a readier means were supplied for enforcing them when duly registered and for one year only. There is, no doubt, much show of reason in this; but the law might have been made more definite, and even more stringent than it now is without engrafting criminal responsibilities on a civil contract, and the object aimed at might have been secured by means less likely to be abused by the stronger party in collision with the weaker. The law of contract in India cannot possibly remain in its present state without injury to all parties concerned, though more Civil Courts have lately been established and the course of civil procedure has been much simplified and improved. Long contracts that carry on the system of involuntary servitude from father to son ought to be at once abolished, both on the poor ryot's account and on that of his employer, for the unwilling and hopeless worker will never be a profitable agent to his employer, and under the present system there can be nothing but perpetual ill-will between them. No one pretends to deny that nineteen out of twenty of the ryots will lie for a single pice, and cheat their employer as often as they have the opportunity; but what, then, is the use of long contracts with such people, who really seem to think honesty the worst policy, and an indication of stupidity;—and how is their character or condition to be improved under a system entailing upon them hopeless poverty and forced, unprofitable, hereditary labour? The indigo planters are by no means below the average of Englishmen of the same class in England, and though there may be a few black sheep in the flock, as we find in every section of society in every country, they are, upon the whole, by no means more disposed to tyrannise over their dependants than other people are. But law is properly a system of checks, and no law should be a mere compliment to human nature or to a particular class of people, and no man, whatever may be his character, should be entrusted with too much power over a fellow-creature, especially a naturally feeble one, when the interests of the two may be supposed to be in opposition, even when in reality they are identical. Mr. Laing might have somewhat strengthened his cause if he had contended that the indigo planters did not ask for a law that would make a simple breach of contract in all cases penal. They only demanded a law that would punish a fraudulent breach of contract, and fraud is or ought to be punishable everywhere. But then a charge of fraud should be carried before a criminal tribunal, and not into a civil court. The indigo planter would soon see that if he were too exacting and severe he would have no ryots to work for him, for every ryot would begin to look upon all civil contracts with Europeans as very frightful documents if his signature to them exposed him to the peril of imprisonment and hard labour.

We readily give Mr. Laing full credit for a generous respect for Lord Canning's memory, though we suspect, however much he may be unconscious of it himself, that a feeling of hostility to Sir Charles Wood had a share in the motives which induced him to come forward so prominently in favour of the Act which Sir Charles has stifled in its birth; and we think Mr. Laing would have shown better taste if he had suppressed his sneers at those British philanthropists amongst the signers of the anti-contract manifesto, who, he says, represent a party who have always taken the side of the debtor against the creditor, and of the workman against the master, "especially where the former has a dark face and the latter to the offence of being rich adds that of having English blood in his veins." We claim for such men as Lord Shaftesbury and his associates the same generous interpretation of their motives as Mr. Laing justly claims on behalf of Lord Canning and his Council. It is not right in Mr. Laing to hint that he who defends the dark-faced and poverty-stricken Hindoo must be hostile to the white-faced and wealthy Christian, or that general benevolence and a respect for universal justice and a disposition to defend the weaker party against the stronger is un-English or unpatriotic. Philanthropy and patriotism are not necessarily opposed, and nothing in fact can be more characteristically English than a love of fair play.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE WAR IN CHINA.—The Gazette of Feb. 13 contains a despatch, dated Head-quarters, Kading, December 5, from Brigadier-General Staveland, C.B., commanding her Majesty's troops in China, detailing the steps that he has taken to keep the captured towns round Shanghai clear of the rebels, and to enable Captain Gordon, R.E., to get the country mapped in.

THE EUROPEAN CHINESE NAVAL FORCES.—The Gazette of Feb. 13 publishes the following notice, dated Admiralty, Feb. 7:—"The Emperor of China has been pleased to establish the following flags for the European Chinese Naval Forces: 1. Imperial Jack, Yellow, with blue dragon. 2. Ensign, Green ground, with two diagonal yellow bands, with Imperial Jack in the centre. Pennant, Green, with yellow diagonal cross next the staff. 3. Admiral's Flag, Green, with Imperial Jack in the upper canton, next the staff. 4. Broad Pennant, Commodore, 1st class, green ditto, ditto. 5. Broad Pennant, Green, with yellow diagonal bands."

NAVAL PRIZE MONEY.—Notices of distribution of prize money, the proceeds of several Chinese junks captured from the 29th of August to the 14th of December, 1857, by her Majesty's ships Cruiser, Forester, Esk, Niger, Bustard, Sampson, Haughty, Surprise, Lee, Nimrod, Highflyer, and boats of Elk, for breach of blockade of the Canton River in the year 1857, appeared in the Gazette of Feb. 13. The distribution will commence on the 19th inst., at the Admiralty.

BRITISH EXPENDITURE IN CHINA.—According to a return, published on Tuesday morning, the annual cost to the Imperial treasury of our troops and civilians now stationed in China, so far as can be known without a reference to China, amounts to £302,508. This does not include the cost of her Majesty's Indian forces, nor of the local corps serving in China.

THE "COLOMBO."—The entire portion of the cargo saved from the wrecked steamer Colombo has arrived at Suez. It comprises about 1,800 packages, principally silk, of which 463 bales have come forward by the Ripon, which arrived at Southampton on the morning of the 16th. The remaining portion will reach Southampton by the next mail.

BODEN SCHOLARSHIP (Oxford, Feb. 18).—Mr. Charles Arthur Roe, postmaster of Merton College, was this day elected to the vacant Sanskrit scholarship on the foundation of the late Colonel Boden. The examiners also recommended to the Vice-chancellor, as worthy of distinction, Archibald Edward Gough, Bible clerk of Lincoln, and Francis Edward Hall, commoner of Corpus Christi.

DRAFTS ON INDIA.—The biddings for 40,00,000 rupees in bills on India took place on the 18th inst. at the Bank of England. The proportions allotted were:—To Calcutta, 23,08,000 rs.; to Bombay, 16,00,000 rs.; and to Madras, 32,000 rs. The declared minimum price was as before, viz., 1s. 11½d. per rupee on Calcutta, and 2s. on Bombay and Madras. The applications within the limits were for about 107 lacs. Tenders on Calcutta, at 1s. 11½d., will receive about 53 per cent.; on Bombay, at 2s., about 19 per cent., and all above these prices in full; on Madras, at 2s., will receive in full.

THE STRAND AT RANGOON.—It is not crowded equally with its London namesake, but still it is fairly filled just now with a motley group of pig-tailed Chinese, turbaned Moguls, tattooed Burmese, and chimney-hatted Parsees, to one and all of whom the advent of a steamer is an event, and not to be missed coûte qui coûte. Open, then, both eyes and ears; though, undoubtedly, you must possess the gift of tongues to understand all you hear. To the unmusical Tamil succeeds the saw-sharpening sound of Chittagong Hindustani. With the vociferations of a Burmese lady, to whose remarkable dress crinoline has not yet imparted elegance, are blended the pitiless rejoinders of her Chinese helpmate—for your Chinese is a citizen of the world, and altogether ignores the Malthusian doctrines on population. He takes up with things as he finds them, and with wives also. He sees his way far more speedily than Mr. Brisket. He comes to Rangoon, and there he settles, in the full spinster acceptance of that word, without keenly regretting the love that his Chinese wife may bear to her own country. The west-end of the Strand, and China-street, are full of Chinese shop-keepers thus settled; some of them, moreover, exceeding well-to-do, carrying on a brisk trade with the neighbouring ports of Moulmein, Penang, and Singapore; and most of them industrious, hard-working fellows, who, with especial reference to their intercourse with Englishmen, have invented a sort of China-English language, applying many English words in a way that would astonish the Dean of Westminster, and absolutely scare the ghost of dear old Sam Johnson.—Once a Week.

PROSPERITY OF BOMBAY.—We have been favoured with the following letter from a well-known Liverpool merchant:—"Bombay, 11th of January, 1863.—I promised to write to you a few lines after arrival here, to let you know what is doing in this distant part of the world. I arrived on the 25th ult., after a very pleasant passage, and found the place in general appearance but little changed since I was last here. There is, however, one feature which forms a striking change in comparison with the past, and that is the presence of tall chimneys, with dense volumes of black smoke issuing from them, reminding one of our own manufacturing towns in England; not a very pleasing change in one respect, for we shall now have the air impregnated with soot, the absence of which has always been to me one of the charms of Indian atmosphere. There are already nine mills at work, or in progress of erection on this island, and there is little doubt but that the manufacturing interest has got a permanent impulse, and will continue rapidly to advance. Bombay is just now beginning to make great strides in commercial progress, and, you may rely upon it, it is destined to become the emporium of the East. Nothing can stop it. By degrees the railways are opening up communication with the interior. Geographically, it is clearly the starting point for England; and its local advantages as a port for shipping are without rival. Depend upon it, as soon as the rail to Calcutta is completed, all the mails and most of the passengers will embark and debark at this port, and in two years hence the trade here will be something enormous. The American war has already produced its effects. The native community, especially the Parsees, have amassed a large amount of wealth. A singular proof of this is evidenced in the immense increase in the number of native carriages kept this last year, which is said to exceed 2,000. The value of land, too, has increased enormously. To give you an instance—the bungalow in which I live, on Malabar-hill, the favourite residence of Europeans, was offered to me for sale three or four years ago for 17,000 rupees; to-day I could not buy it for 35,000 rupees. The great purchasers of house property are the Parsees. They are gradually getting a large portion of it into their hands, especially in the fashionable parts, and as leases expire they put the rents up enormously, and in many cases refuse to let at all. This is a great nuisance, and we are all at a disadvantage. We all look on the place as a stepping-stone to fortune only, and as soon as our money is made we leave it. Hence we decline to sink our money in property which we hope soon to turn our backs upon. It is, however, the Parsee's home, and he is determined to make the most of it. We cannot blame him, although we inwardly 'bless' him for his interference. The future that is in store for Bombay makes me feel greater interest in it than you; and, though I don't care to sink my money in property here, I feel sure that those who do so will reap an ample reward. We are now enjoying delicious weather, the temperature about 72 deg. in the evening, and 68 deg. in the morning, and I cannot help congratulating myself on the advantages which, in this respect, I enjoy over you, who are only too glad to crowd round a Christmas fire, and when you leave the house have to accept the alternative of wet feet and frostbitten noses."—Liverpool Albion.

SALT TRADE WITH CHINA.—The following are the chief reasons urged by a deputation which waited on Earl Russell on Wednesday last for the admission of salt into China:—"During the first China war, in 1859, the Salt Chamber memorialised the Foreign-office to obtain admission of English salt into China. Instructions were sent to Lord Elgin, but arrived too late; the war was over and a treaty concluded. An interview was sought with the Hon. Mr. Bruce, Minister appointed to Peking, and the subject brought fully under his notice before he left England. When Lord Elgin returned from China a deputation from the Chamber had an interview with his lordship, who then stated that it was a question of revenue, and that if we could satisfy the Chinese Government that they would not suffer in this way it might be more feasible. Her Majesty's Government promised renewed representations to China on the subject. The war was renewed, Lord Elgin returned to China, and concluded a treaty in which a clause was allowed making the admission of salt prohibitory, to the great surprise of the Salt Chamber. Renewed application to the Foreign-office, who promised to urge the British Minister in China on the subject. Interview with Mr. Lay, at Lord Elgin's suggestion, also with Mr. Parkes. The former thought it might be practicable to induce the Chinese Government to make a trial with one province, under some arrangements with the English representatives that would prevent any detriment to the revenue. Nothing has yet been done in this way, and Mr. Lay is returning to China. In 1844 not a ton of English salt was imported into India; in 1862 Calcutta alone, two hundred thousand tons. The salt trade is much dependent on foreign consumption. The Southern States of America have hitherto taken one-fourth of the production, and the trade is much depressed from the failure of this source. The salt trade employs a large quantity of tonnage, and the vessels going to China are much in want of outward cargo. The privilege of exporting this article to China would be a great boon to shipping. The consumption of salt in China is believed to be enormous. Smuggling exists to a large extent; but it does not appear that an importation of foreign salt would interfere with any vested interests, or that the Chinese have any prejudices that way. It is, as Lord Elgin justly said, a question of revenue, and the only explanation the Chamber has received of Lord Elgin allowing salt to be a prohibited article under the treaty is that without this clause it might have led to a smuggling trade up the rivers, for which the British Government might be held responsible, or involve its representatives in questions with the Chinese Government. The Chamber has no desire to cause disputes with the Chinese Government; they believe that both the Chinese Government and people would be benefited by the admission of English salt; and that under such an arrangement as that suggested to Mr. Lay the Chinese revenue would be fully protected. It is a revenue question, as stated by Lord Elgin, and the example of Calcutta is an encouragement in this respect. It only requires bonded stores, whence the salt can be delivered on payment of the Chinese duty, more easily and efficiently collected than under the present Chinese system. In every respect, as regards the salt manufacture in this country—the shipping interest, which suffers from the want of outward cargo and promoting commercial intercourse with the Chinese—the admission of salt is an object of great importance, which it should be strongly pressed on the English authorities of China to obtain."

Daily Boarders	20
Daily Pupils	14
Music, Drawing, and Singing, by a Lady, each	4
Do. do. by a Master, each	8
German and Italian, each	8
Dancing and Calisthenics, each	4

Landress, Four Pounds.

Each Young Lady is requested to bring a Silver Fork, a Desert Spoon (which will be returned), and Six Towels.

A Quarter's Notice is requested previously to the removal of a Pupil.

The Misses WINTERBOTTOM can give most unexceptionable references.

A LADY, who has for many years conducted a superior School will be happy to RECEIVE into her Establishment YOUNG LADIES from India or the Colonies. The system of Education is based on the modern and intelligent plan of cultivating the understanding rather than crowding the memory. To those who value thorough Christian principles, combined with home comforts and a superior Education, this Establishment can be highly recommended. Testimonials from ministers and others.

For further particulars apply to Miss MASON, Agency for the Employment of Ladies, 12, Cranley-terrace, Fulham-road, London, S.W.

THE REV. E. A. CLAYDON PREPARES PUPILS for the Universities, for the Civil Service, and for the Competitive Examinations for Woolwich, Sandhurst, and the Line. References are permitted to EDGAR CORRIE, Esq., 26, Lombard-street, E.C.
Address 4, Church-terrace, Lee, S.E.

HINDOOSTANI AND PERSIAN.

LESSONS in the above LANGUAGES are given by an INDIAN GENTLEMAN of Twenty Years' Experience as Professor, Interpreter, and Translator; who has obtained Certificates of degrees of honour and proficiency from the Examiners of the College of Fort William. He possesses the most satisfactory testimonials, and can give unexceptionable references.
Address, "ALLY," care of Messrs. ALLEN and Co., 13, Waterloo-place, S.W.

MILITARY EDUCATION.—The Rev. CHARLES J. HUGHES, M.A. (Wrangler, Cambridge, 1852), Rector of Perrivale (population 32), begs to inform his Friends that he has REMOVED from the Finchley-road to his Residence (built expressly for him), CASTLEHARBOUR, EALING, W., where he receives both Senior and Junior Pupils to prepare for the Army, Military Colleges, and the Civil Service.

MILITARY and NAVAL EDUCATION.—A MARRIED CLERGYMAN, resident at Brighton, RECEIVES a limited number of PUPILS, between the ages of Twelve and Fifteen, who may be destined for the Military and Naval Professions. With a view to this ultimate object, the entire course of Study, from the outset, is regulated expressly in conformity with the requirements of the Examinations at Addiscombe, Sandhurst, Woolwich, and Portsmouth; and every care is taken to direct special attention to those subjects likely to prove professionally useful in the future career of the Naval or Military officer. The Pupils are examined periodically in Mathematics by Professor J. R. YOUNG, formerly of Belfast College, and Author of "A Course of Mathematics, Pure and Mixed, for the Use of Candidates for the Military and Civil Service Examinations," &c.; and also in Classics and Modern Languages by Scholars of repute. Prospectuses may be had of Messrs. ALLEN and Co., 13, Waterloo-place, London, S.W.

A LADY can strongly recommend an EUROPEAN FEMALE SERVANT, who is accustomed to the care of children, and who wishes to RETURN to Calcutta about the end of April, or in May.
For further particulars apply to C. W. H., care of Messrs. Smith, Elder, and Co., 65, Cornhill, London, E.C.

CONVEYANCE OF PARCELS to or from
INDIA.—The ORIENTAL INLAND STEAM COM-PANY (Limited) undertakes to CONVEY PARCELS between ENGLAND and the principal places in the INTERIOR of India. The Company's vessels ply on the Ganges, between Calcutta and Allahabad; and on the Indus and Sutlej, between Kurrachee, Multan, and Ferozepore; taking goods also for the Upper Indus, in correspondence with the new line of the Punjab Government. The Company carries at through rates, by road and railway, as well as by river.—For tariff of charges apply at the Oriental Inland Steam Company's Office, 9, Bishop-street, London.

FIRE! THIEVES!! FIRE!!!
C. H. GRIFITHS having purchased nearly all the best quality of Fire-proof Safes from the International Exhibition of 1863, including those made by Messrs. Perry, Chaitwood, Klothes, and other eminent makers, is enabled to offer them at half the original cost. The patented improvements of the latter maker render it an impossibility for fire to take any effect under any circumstances of time and place. In consequence of the increasing demand for these essential and valuable repositories, which no house of business, or, indeed, private house (where plate, books, and documents are kept)
should be without, in these hazardous and dangerous times,
C. H. G. has taken additional premises, 3, Pentonville-road, opposite the Angel, Islington, where he also intends to keep a variety of Second-hand Safes by those eminent large makers, Milner, Price, Mordan, &c., at half the price of new. Sketches,
with prices, free by post.
Old-change, St. Paul's, London; and opposite the Angel, Islington.

SAUCE.—LEA AND PERRINS' WORCESTERSHIRE SAUCE.

This delicious condiment, pronounced by Connoisseurs
"THE ONLY GOOD SAUCE," is prepared solely by LEA & PERRINS.

The Public are respectfully cautioned against worthless imitations, and should see that LEA & PERRINS' Names are on Wrapper, Label, Bottle, and Stopper.

* Sold Wholesale and for Export, by the Proprietors, Worcester; Messrs. CROSS and BLACKWELL; Messrs. Barlow and Sons, London; &c., &c.; and by Grocers and Oilmen universally.

NOTHING IMPOSSIBLE.—The greatest and most useful invention of the day, AQUA AMA-RELLA.—Messrs. JOHN GOSNELL and Co., Three King-court, Lombard-street, Perfumers to her Majesty, respectfully offer to the public this truly marvellous fluid, which gradually restores the human hair to its pristine hue—no matter at what age. The Aqua Amarella has none of the properties of dye; it, on the contrary, is beneficial to the system, and when the hair is once restored one application per month will keep it in perfect colour. Price one guinea per bottle.

THE BEAUTIES OF THE EAST.—All that can preserve and enhance the charms of woman, youth, and beauty.—Madame RACHEL begs leave to inform the nobility, aristocracy, and her lady patronesses that she has just received a costly consignment of ARABIAN PREPARA-TIONS, which render the hair, teeth, and complexion beautiful beyond comparison; and the choicest Arabian perfumes—a fac simile of which was presented in golden vases by the ladies of Paris to the Empress Eugénie, and have gained for her the patronage of royalty.—Can be selected at, or forwarded from, her Drawing-room Saloon, 47a, New Bond-street.

CHILDREN'S WORM TABLETS
(KEATING'S).—The recently discovered unfailing remedy for Worm disorders in Children and Adults has now been concentrated in the form of a purely Vegetable Sweetmeat. The Tablet is eagerly taken by children, and one to three given once or twice a week will effect a safe and certain cure.

Prepared and sold in Tins of various sizes by THOMAS
KEATING, Chemist, &c., 79, St. Paul's Churchyard, London, E.C., and Retail by all Druggists and Patent Medicine Vendors in the World.

Observe the words "KEATING'S WORM TABLETS" are engraved on the Government Stamp of each Tin, without which none are genuine.

CORYZINE.—This invaluable, non-sternu-tative POWDER, employed like Snuff, affords instan-taneous relief in incipient cases of cold, Influenza or Coryza, the sense of suffocation with excessive secretion supervening, being in both cases effectually removed. To those subject to this distressing complaint it is confidently recommended as a sure remedy.

Sold in Boxes at 1s. 1jd. and 2s. 9d.; post free, 1s. 3d. and
2s. 1d. in stamps, by MARSHALL and MELLIN, English and Foreign Chemists, 16, Titchborne-street, opposite the County Fire Office, Regent-street.

"INDIAN BAEL" for Diarrhoea, Dysentery,
&c. Imported by J. G. GOULD, Pharmaceutical Chemist, 190, Oxford-street, corner of Orchard-street, Port-man-square, W.

RUPTURES.—BY ROYAL LETTERS PATENT.

WHITE'S MOC-MAIN LEVER TRUSS
is allowed by upwards of two hundred medical gentlemen to be the most effective invention in the curative treatment of HERNIA. The use of a steel spring, so hurtful in its effects, is here avoided, a soft bandage being worn round the body, while the requisite resisting power is supplied by the MOC-MAIN PAD and PATENT LEVER, fitting with so much ease and closeness that it cannot be detected, and may be worn during sleep. A descriptive circular may be had, and the Truss (which cannot fail to fit), forwarded by post, on the circumference of the body two inches below the hips being sent to the manufacturer.

"KEATING'S COUGH LOZENGES" are engraved on the Government Stamp of each Box, without which none are genuine.

KEATING'S COUGH LOZENGES.

JUDGED BY THE IMMENSE DEMAND,

this UNIVERSAL REMEDY now stands the first in public favour and confidence; this result has been acquired by the test of fifty years' experience. These Lozenges may be found on sale in every British Colony, and throughout India and China they have been highly esteemed wherever introduced.
For COUGHS, ASTHMA, and all affections of the Throat and Chest, they are the most agreeable and efficacious remedy.

Prepared and sold in Boxes, Tins, and Bottles of various sizes by THOMAS KEATING, Chemist, &c., 79, St. Paul's Churchyard, London. Sold retail by all Druggists and Patent Medicine Vendors in the World.

Quintessence of Jamaica Ginger and Camomile.

GINGER has long been deservedly known as an excellent domestic medicine, and, combined with camomile, it is the most efficient stomachic tonic known, for while the ginger relieves the stomach from distension and flatulency, arising from impaired digestion, the camomile strengthens the coats of the stomach, and by that means gives it a healthy and invigorating tone. So highly concentrated is this preparation, it is unimpaired by age or climate, and well adapted for exportation. In Gout, Spasms, Dysentery, Cholera, or those complaints incidental to tropical climates, it is invaluable, as in numerous cases a dose or two has checked and frequently cured most alarming attacks. No family should be without it. Sold in half-pints, quarter-pints, and one-eighth pints.

Agreeable Seidlitz Powder, in one bottle, protected by a case, with measure and spoon included. The advantage of this preparation is the perfect combination of the solid ingredients of the Seidlitz Spring in one compound powder.

It is very cooling and refreshing, well adapted for exportation, or travellers by land or sea.

Aromatic Tincture of Quinidine.—For the prevention of Fever, Intermittent or Remittent Ague, and other effects of Malaria.

No person exposed to the influence or predisposing cause of Fever should be without it, for if taken in small doses daily the system will become so thoroughly impregnated with its principles as to be rendered proof against all attacks of Contagion or Malaria.—Sold in pints, half-pints, and quarter-pints.

The above articles prepared only by THOS. WILKINSON (late Wilkinson, Bridge, & Co.), 270, Regent-street, London, W.

FRITCHARD'S DANDELION, CAMO-MILE, RHUBARB, and GINGER PILLS.—This peculiar preparation of Dandelion acts particularly on the liver, thus avoiding the use of mercurials, and will be found invaluable to parties suffering from a sluggish state of that organ, or who have resided in India or other hot climates; whilst the well known stomachic efficacy of camomile, rhubarb, and ginger, renders these pills the most happy combination possible; and as many are at a loss for a safe remedy they will find this medicine a great convenience, which may be resorted to by all persons at any age, under any circumstances, and without the least inconvenience.

Prepared by W. Fritchard, Apothecary, 65, Charing-cross, London, in bottles, 1s. 1jd., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. May be had of all Medicine Vendors.

DINNEFORD'S PURE FLUID MAGNE-

SIA has been, during twenty-five years, emphatically sanctioned by the Medical Profession, and universally accepted by the Public, as the Best Remedy for Acidity of the Stomach, Heartburn, Headache, Gout, and Indigestion, and as a Mild Aperient for delicate constitutions, more especially for Ladies and Children. When combined with the Acidulated Lemon Syrup, it forms an agreeable Effervescent Drought, in which its Aperient qualities are much increased. During Hot Seasons, and above all, in Hot Climates, the regular use of this simple and elegant remedy has been found highly beneficial.

It is prepared (in a state of perfect purity and of uniform strength) by DINNEFORD and Co., 173, New Bond-street, London; and sold by all respectable Chemists throughout the World.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT and PILLS.

REMARKABLE RECOVERY.—Mothers and nurses should read the testimonials to the efficacy of Holloway's remedies in subduing scarlatina, diphtheria, bronchitis, and those inflammatory complaints which are now committing such havoc both among children and adults. "I had only rubbed your Ointment on the throat two days, in a case of bronchitis, when my husband improved in a most remarkable manner, and in less than a week was quite well." Such testimony should be known to persons liable to throat affections, and all families generally. The worst ulcers, sores, and wounds become clean, and soon grow up, under the application of Holloway's Ointment, which always prevents the spread of inflammation and unhealthy action.

MAILS TO INDIA.

Mails to India and China, via Marseilles, are despatched from London as follows, viz.:—Those for Bombay packets, on the evening of the 3rd and 15th of each month; and those for Calcutta packets (including mails for Ceylon, Madras, and China), on the evenings of the 10th and 26th of each month. When any of these dates falls on a Sunday, the mails are made up on the following evening.

Letters and Newspapers can be forwarded to any part of India, via Bombay and Marseilles, and in most cases will reach their destination some days sooner than if despatched by the following Calcutta mail. The Bombay mails via Southampton, however, are no longer available for the transmission of Letters or Newspapers to the Madras Presidency.

Mails for the Mediterranean and all parts of India and China, except the Bombay Presidency, are despatched via Southampton on the mornings of the 4th and 20th, or, when either of these dates falls on Sunday, upon the previous evening.

Mails for the Mediterranean, the Presidency of Bombay, and Upper or North-West Provinces of Bengal and China, are despatched via Southampton on the 12th and 27th of the month, except when these dates fall on Sunday, in which case they are forwarded on the previous evening.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE Indian papers are still harping upon the report of Sir Hugh Rose's recall or resignation. The wish was father to the thought; but we hope that the wishes of the Indian community will ere long take a very different direction. The London Correspondent of the Friend of India tells our Indian community that after the Duke of Cambridge had very carefully read over the report in the Crawley case it appeared quite clear to his Royal Highness that justice and discipline rendered necessary a decision directly opposed to Sir Hugh Rose's remarks; but yet his Royal Highness was of opinion that a delicate and generous consideration of Sir Hugh's past services and present position would make his recall too harsh a measure. In spite of his imprudences and faults, Sir Hugh Rose has a strong claim upon the good-will of his countrymen. A recall would deprive us for ever of the services of a gallant and able soldier. He is certainly, as we have already stated, not to be recalled; but it is understood in India that a memorandum on the subject-matter of the Inniskilling Dragoons affair will soon reach Sir Hugh Rose, and that, in spite of the pill being gilded, it will be a rather disagreeable one to swallow. Some think that it will induce Sir Hugh to resign, and others seem to take it for granted that Sir Hugh likes his post too well to give it up in a pet or for a trifle. We have reason to believe that nothing in the shape of a "wiggling" is going out to India, and that it is the wish of the Duke of Cambridge that the whole matter should be allowed to pass over as quietly as possible.

Sir Hugh Rose has completed his tour of inspection in Central India, and is now in Oude, where he will find his way to Meerut.

The Secretary of State for India has decided that there is no objection to servants of Government, civil or military, holding shares in mining or other companies, the only restriction imposed on them being the rule that they are to take no part in the active management of such companies, and shall not be employed in the districts where the operations of the companies are carried on. But public servants in India are not to interpret this indulgence into a permission to engage in speculations in the public funds or in the shares of joint-stock companies, unless those companies are formed for agricultural purposes, such as tea or coffee cultivation.

The old Rajah of Mysore has appealed to Lord Elgin against the decision of Lord Canning, which settled the question as to his claim to govern the country which has so long been under British administration. He asks for the restoration of Mysore. But the decision of both the home and the Indian authorities has made the appeal quite useless, though it has been drawn up with great tact and ability by Dr. Campbell.

Mr. C. Beadon, the Lieutenant-governor of Bengal, had left Calcutta for Patna, where the Behar chiefs will meet both his Honour and Lord Elgin in durbar.

Officers of the Queen's regiments on the staff have been somewhat irritated by an order directing them to choose definitively whether they will keep to the Staff Corps or return to their regiments.

Mr. Erskine, at the close of the Session of the Imperial Council, will return to Bombay, and take his seat in the High Court of that presidency. He will retire from the service about the close of next year.

The contest between our sepoys and the savages on the Jyntea Hills is, we trust, drawing to a close. One of the ringleaders, U. Kiang Nongbah, has been captured and hung, and eight other ringleaders are in gaol.

Very great discontent has been excited by the first sale of waste lands at Darjeeling (the Bright Spot). About 40,000 acres were sold, chiefly to Europeans, by the superintendent, Captain Murray. That officer, by an unfortunate oversight or inadvertency, omitted to advertise the applications for land. The grantees had paid only five shillings an acre for their land. When it was brought to the notice of Government the whole land was put up to auction and fetched thirty shillings an acre. The first grantees had already in some cases not only paid the surveying fees and the price of the land, but had commenced expensive improvements. The question is whether the Government is or is not bound by the acts of its own representatives. Some of the disappointed grantees threaten to carry the matter before a legal tribunal.

The Governor-general's Legislative Council is now discussing the proposed measure to bestow on the High Courts of India powers analogous to those wielded at home by Sir Cresswell Cresswell relative to matrimonial and divorce cases. There are some difficulties in the way which seem to render it necessary to refer the subject to the home law officers of the Crown.

As rather a good sign of the intellectual condition of what has been but too often designated "the Benighted Presidency," we observe that an able paper there, the Madras Athenæum and Statesman, hitherto published three times a week, is to appear as a daily paper.

Prince Azeem Jah, the claimant to the vacant musnud or throne of the Carnatic, is about to appeal against Sir Charles Wood's decision of last year, which confirmed his deprivation of the rights, titles, prerogatives, revenues, and so forth, which, it was said, were secured to his family by the Treaty of 1801.

The steamer Burmah, bound to Madras from the Northern ports, has run ashore at Pulicat. H.M. steamer Sydney has been sent to her assistance, but no further intelligence respecting her had reached Madras when the mail left for England.

Lady Elgin was to hold a drawing-room on the 29th of January.

Some members of the Society of Friends landed in Calcutta from the last mail steamer. They are about to make a tour to report upon the state of India with reference to certain philanthropic objects.

The last sale of opium in the month of January realized £450,000, against £350,000 in December. The increase of a thousand chests of opium has not lowered the price, and the December rate was £30 a chest above Mr. Laing's estimate.

Commodore Montessor had arrived at Bombay to take command of her Majesty's fleet in the Indian Seas under the Admiral at the China station.

The good people of Ceylon are impatient to have their railway commenced upon. They are sadly behind Continental India in all great public conveniences. Mr. Faviell is said to be on his way to Ceylon to complete his contract and commence active operations.

The vessels of the new Madras and Colombo Steam Ship Company are to ply between Colombo and Madras, touching at all important intermediate ports. A large proportion of the shares in this scheme are already subscribed for. The extension of the Great Southern of India Railway to the Madras line will, with the vessels of this new steam-ship company, open a communication between Ceylon and the west coast of India, which will be available at all seasons of the year.

The intelligence of the death of General Phillip Bainbridge, K.C.B. (Colonel of the 26th Regiment Cameronians), formerly Commander of the Forces at Ceylon, had been received at Colombo, on the 24th of January, with strong expressions of regret. He was one of the few surviving Peninsular heroes.

Dr. Claughton, Bishop of Colombo, has commenced open-air preaching. Although he addressed a crowd of natives by interpretation, it is said that they listened to him with great attention as he unfolded the great central truths of the Gospel. He also addressed a large assembly of Singhalese women, in a coffee-store.

The Crown lands in Kandy have been selling at an average of £5 per acre. The lands are of very unequal value, and the prices varied from £2 to £40 per acre. The natives eagerly purchase land in small allotments.

The total export of Ceylon coffee in 1862 was 605,000 cwts.—in round numbers the value being £1,545,000.

A knave, calling himself Capt. Smith, of the 9th Lancers, is going about Ceylon with strange tales of distress, and collecting alms on a large scale. His real name is Medley. He is described as a very good looking fellow, very neat and clean in his dress, very plausible in conversation, and with the manners of a gentleman.

There has been an extensive system of coining at Negombo. Persons have been detected by the police in converting sixpenny pieces into something very like half sovereigns. The Indian Government had complained of these false coins being exported from Ceylon to India. One of these coiners turned out to be a Mussulman from India.

Railways are stretching their long lines over all parts of the world. A project has been just conceived to have a line of railway between Tien-tsin and Peking. These iron lines indicate a golden time. Railways and telegraphs will do more to link all countries together, and turn all nations into one vast family or brotherhood, than any other results of the arts or sciences of civilisation that we have yet arrived at.

General Burgevine, who was Ward's successor, and nominally second in command to the late Taouta of Shanghai, has got himself into disgrace. It appears that his superior pressed him to besiege Nankin without delay, whereas his army was not at the time prepared for such a movement. With a view to stimulate to active service the authorities refused to pay the troops until he obeyed the orders of his nominal superior. On this the troops became mutinous, and threatened to sack the town and rob the banks. Burgevine called on the Imperial banker or treasurer, who treated him with insolence, whereupon the General struck him and took away by force some 40,000 dollars, and distributed them amongst his soldiers. The Chinese authorities at once deposed Burgevine, and begged the English authorities at Shanghai to nominate his successor. They appointed Captain Holland as a temporary arrangement.

BENGAL.

THE FIRST SALE OF WASTE LANDS UNDER THE NEW RULES.

The first sale of waste lands in India under the provisions of Sir Charles Wood's despatch took place at Darjeeling on the 5th inst. It is important to observe that Lord Canning's rules, equally with Sir Charles Wood's, provided for sale by auction in certain cases. The injustice of the latter lay in this—that whereas Lord Canning would have put up to auction only such lands as were applied for by more than one party, Sir C. Wood insists on selling all lands in this way, even when there is but one applicant, and thus invites ignorant jobbers to hang on the skirts of bond fide explorers and capitalists, and take advantage of their skill and experience. Where two or twenty men honestly become aware of the value of a given plot, and apply for it, the plot must be sold by auction. But when, in some remote district, a capitalist runs serious risks in exploring, and uses his skill to discover a grant for which no one else has applied, it is surely unfair to invite jobbers to steal from him legally the fruit of his skill, or run up the price at the sale. Still Sir Charles Wood has ordered this course to be adopted, and the local authorities must submit. So far as promises and pledges go the Bengal Government, approved of by Lord Elgin, at first did their best to prevent at least any breach of faith. They assured all who had even applied for grants under Lord Canning's rules that the land would be made over to them, interpreting the phrase "registered" with a wise and politic liberality. What capitalists had to do was to apply, the rest of the process of registering and advertising belonged to the Government. If Government failed to do its duty, surely the capitalist is not to be punished. So little did the Bengal Government expect to be required to sell by auction land applied for under Lord Canning's resolution, that in their administration report for 1861-62 the fact was prominently mentioned—and in a tone of evident satisfaction—that "every acre of culturable land" in Darjeeling had been applied for.

But to the astonishment of all, and especially of those who, like ourselves, had given the Hon. Mr. Beadon credit for fairness and tact, an advertisement appeared in the Gazette of the 3rd of December, announcing the sale by auction on the 4th January, at the upset price of Rs. 2-8 an acre, of thirty lots, varying from twelve to three thousand acres, for which natives and Europeans had applied. Some of these applicants, like Messrs. Dear and Rundle, had actually paid the purchase-money, and all, we maintain, were legally entitled to possession under Mr. Beadon's own rules. But—and we have been careful to ascertain the official facts—the Bengal Government have declared the sale of these lots under Lord Canning's resolution void, because its own subordinate, Captain Murray, did not advertise the applications publicly. Could anything be more monstrous than to visit on confiding capitalists the sins of its own officer? This omission of duty may be an admirable reason for the dismissal of Captain Murray or his superiors, but surely not for the robbery of settlers whose only offence is that they believed Government to be as honest in its dealings as they themselves must be, if they would escape the law. The Bengal Government seem to have felt the wrong they were doing, and at the sale orders were given that all registered applicants under Lord Canning's rules who had entered on the occupancy of the grants might keep them—if they paid at the rate of Rs. 10 instead of Rs. 2-8 an acre. Here Government confess their injustice, and pretend to repair it by another act quite as unjust. Either these applicants were entitled to the land at Rs. 2-8 or they were not. If they were not, why was not the land sold like the grants, which had not been taken possession of?

But this is trifling. Could any title be better than that of men who actually paid money for their land? What matters it to Government whether a purchaser immediately occupies a piece of land which he has bought or not? Is the play worth the candle? We do not hold, and never expect to hold, a rood of waste land in India. As one of the public we might be glad that the Treasury has received an average of Rs. 16.8 instead of Rs. 2.8 for each acre at Darjeeling. But we value public honour and Government morality much higher than rupees. If the case is as we have stated it, who will trust the promises of the Bengal Government? It is bad enough that Sir C. Wood should make the Government of India violate its solemn pledges in the face of our native subjects. It is worse when a local Government, after renewing certain of these pledges, falsifies itself, and visits on the public the folly of its own agent. The total number of acres sold was 39,675, and the sum paid was at the average rate of Rs. 16.8 an acre. Who shall estimate the evil done by broken pledges, and by lawyers' advertisements warning the public that the State is selling that of which it has no right to dispose?—Friend of India, Jan. 15.

THE ORIENTAL INLAND STEAM COMPANY.

The Gogra, the fourth of the Oriental Inland Steam Company's steamers intended for the Ganges line, was launched from the company's yard at Garden Reach on Wednesday afternoon. The Gogra is a similar vessel to the Soune, another of the company's vessels, reputed to be the swiftest river vessel either in India or England, with the exception of the steamer Indus, lately placed by the same company on the River Indus to ply between Kurrachee and Mooltan. The Soune, when tested at the measured mile, is reported to have attained a speed of eighteen and a half knots, or a little over twenty statute miles, per hour. But although great speed is indicative of great power, and is a manifest advantage in the navigation of rapid rivers, it is not solely by the quality of great speed that any very eminent measure of commercial success in the navigation of the Ganges can be attained. The speed attainable, even by the fastest river boats, must necessarily fall very far short of that attainable by the railway running along the river banks; and for the conveyance of passengers, and also for the conveyance of all articles for which rapidity of conveyance is a primary necessity, there can be no doubt that the railway will henceforth be employed; that is, unless the system of prohibitive rates, fixed for indigo and the like, be permitted, in the teeth of the public interest and the cost of the guaranteeing government, to be persevered in; a thing not likely with Sir Charles Trevelyan at hand. River steamers, consequently, to have a prosperous career under this new order of things, must be able to carry more cheaply than the railway, seeing that the inducement of cheapness is the only one they can now present; and a steamer to be able to carry cheaply without loss, must, in future, have the capability of carrying far larger cargoes than have sufficed to remunerate them heretofore. The Oriental Inland Steam Company appear long since to have perceived the necessity, as their principal vessels, such as the Ganges and Jumna, are far more powerful than any river steamers hitherto introduced into India, and propose to tow far larger cargoes disposed in appropriate barges in the manner in which we have seen the Danubian Steam Navigation, successfully competing with the governmental railways along the Danube, carrying produce and goods of a similar nature up and down an equally difficult navigation. The Ganges and Jumna are each of 400-horse power nominal, and are said to be capable of working up to about five times this power, so that each of these vessels will in practice command about 2,000 actual or indicated horse power, and should be able to tow several thousand tons of cargo, and in this capability they will, if they attain it, work at such low freights as will insure traffic with such large returns as will insure profit. Although, therefore, vessels like the Soune and Gogra may be useful and profitable on lines on which railway communication does not exist, we do not see how vessels other than such as the Ganges and Jumna can be profitable on the main river or on main lines of traffic. The smaller vessels, like skirmishers, may be useful for special purposes, but it is by the heavy and powerful boats that the battle of competition must be fought. The effect of the railway on the river traffic has hardly yet been perceived, as the goods traffic is only opened yet to Dinapore, and they have in every way discouraged heavy traffic; and even under better management in this respect we do not imagine that in the case of traffic derived from the opposite of the Ganges, the railway is so favourably circumstanced for attracting it as in the case of business presenting itself in the districts that the railway passes through. Already, however, despite of discouragement and every want of facility, we learn that the railway traffic from Dinapore is very large, and if the river steamers hope to preserve their traffic, it can only be done by lowering the rates to such a point as will constitute an adequate inducement to shippers. The sooner they perceive the necessity the better for all parties; and the railway and steamer lines will thus fall naturally into that sort of traffic which is the best adapted for each, and which alone can be a permanent dependence.—Englishman.

SIR CHARLES TREVELYAN AND HIS WORK.

Sir Charles Trevelyan's chief work will be financial, but there are more general and certainly not less important questions which must be decided in the course of the year, and in coming to a decision on which his experience will be invaluable.
